OCE Offers 3 New Programs This Fall

Statesman News Service

MONMOUTH—Beginning with the fall term in September, Oregon College of Education is adding three additional programs of study to the elementary teacher education program in operation there for nearly 70 years.

The new programs include pre-professional curricula of two years in length, high school teacher preparation, and a liberal arts and science program culminating in the B. S. degree in General Studies.

The pre-professional program enables a student to complete two years of college work toward starting in professions such as medicine, law, dentistry, business administration, journalism, and similar fields.

One year of university or college preparation is given in such specialized areas as engineering, agriculture, forestry and pharmacy.

Students May Transfer

Students may transfer to other state institutions in Oregon for the remainder of their specialized professional work in these fields.

The high school teacher preparation program enables students to be certificated to teach in high school. They will major in one of three areas, social science, humanities or science-mathematics. They may take a minor in one of the other fields or in a specialized area.

Thus, a student at OCE has the opportunity to prepare for teaching in kindergarten, elementary, junior high, high school, with added specialties in special education and in part-time librarianship.

Four-Year Program

The B. S. degree in General Studies is a four-year liberal arts and science program. It provides for the student a broad liberal arts and science education. It is excellent also for freshman students who are undecided as to the field of study in which they wish to specialize.

These new programs begin the academic year 1954-55 and the first degrees will be awarded at commencement in June, 1956.

The Oregon College of Education is the only state-supported smaller college in western Ore-
