Hi, there! Painting season is upon us, and I think everyone has been bitten with the bug! Someone just said this morning, "What in the world shall I paint my kitchen?" Kitchens seem to be a problem—we're so used to thinking of kitchens in gleaming white that it's hard to get habit out of the way. Actually, I have the feeling that there is only one main thought to keep in mind in decorating a kitchen—that it must look "happy".

Now to me "happy" means more than just cheerful—with the amount of time required in the kitchen besides the number of "extra-curricular" activities the whole family carries on there, color and design in the kitchen needs to give us inspiration, satisfaction, friendliness and warmth.

So many of the new homes now are built with keeping-rooms—fireplaces, bookshelves, Boston rocker, and all—with the idea of centering family activity near the "heart of the home." You'll say, well it's easy to decorate a kitchen like that, but what about my two by four kitchen—how can I give it the "happy" look? The answer to that lies in using color and design and an interesting curtain treatment.

Color? We certainly don't have to be bound by color these days with combinations of color just good enough to eat just begging to be used. How about pale pink with charcoal? Or feature lemon yellow, lime, and olive green used together. Even strawberry pink with dark red with a touch of mint green on the curtains. How about pale casaba green with apricot and cocoa brown. See? They really do sound good enough to eat!

One of the fool-proof ways of choosing a color combination is to select a wallpaper for the dinette—perhaps a sketchy scene of a French sidewalk cafe, or one of the new designs with baskets of fruit, or perhaps a small neat provincial design—then paint the rest of the kitchen and cupboards in a color from the paper. It's hard to stand in the middle of the kitchen and dream up a new color scheme, it takes inspiration from someplace, and wallpaper is a good place to look for it.

Perky curtains made in cute style of chintz, organdy, or sheeting are the answer for easy laundering, privacy, and the "new" look. They can be hung on brass rodding, or on the usual oval rodding. Try matching wallpaper and fabrics for coordination in dinette and kitchen. Start looking without preconceived ideas and see where your imagination takes you! Your family may think you've eaten too many strawberries, but I warrant they will brag on you when you're through with your project! Not only that, but you yourself will enjoy your "happy" kitchen. Try it.

See you next week in San Francisco.
