by Al Lightner

Do professional football "spring training" camps differ much from those in baseball, in the matter of hours per day, restrictions, compensations, etc? Not any more than night differs from day. After visiting many baseball encampments over the years, both as player and news-hounding pest, we were interested in a comparison with the current New York Giants grid setup here. What we have learned amazed us. A baseball player's (present day species) would flip his lid were he as confined as a pay-for-play footballer.

For other than his daily two or three hours on the diamond during spring training, a baseballer's time is mostly generally his own. He can go to shows, visit the pubs, eat in restaurants, date a dolly in the evening and sleep as late as he wishes in the morning, just so he's in gear when his manager cracks the whip.

Now have a look at the Giants' daily schedule: Breakfast (training table style at 7:30 a.m. First practice session at 9:30, with players warming up, on their own, starting at 9 a.m. Practice until 11:30, followed by shower and return to Baxter Hall for 12:30 p.m. lunch. Second practice starting at 2:30. Workout until 5 p.m. Dinner at 6:30. At 8 p.m. comes assemblage for football movies, diagrams and general "skull" session. All must be in their rooms by 11 p.m., with "lights out" curfew at 11:30. Married men on the squad must stay at Baxter Hall, but are allowed out on weekends.

So as you can easily see, it's a mighty serious business with the pro touchdowns even during the training period. They do have at least one thing in common with baseballers, however. The athletes get no salary during the training.

Eighty Offensive Plays to Be Used by Giants

How many plays will the Giants have when they are ready for National League battle? Eighty all told. Head Man Howell, one of the most friendly and cooperative mentors we've ever met, says his squad will use five series of the main-motion offense, one of which will be the split-T. There will be eight variations on each side in the five series, making for the 80 distinct plays the squad will use.

"What we will use most of all depends upon what works the best for us," the big man from Arkansas elaborates. "We now plan to use split-T about 20 per cent of the time. If it works well for us, we'll use it more than that."

This is the earliest a New York Giants team has ever opened practice. Usually the squads of the past—and there have been 29 of 'em—got under way after August 1. But with the Portland game with the Los Angeles Rams booked for August 8, it was necessary that the current club get in at least three weeks of drills beforehand.

Howell Has Much Praise for Younce, Cuff, Austin

Howell has great praise for three gents of the Willamette Valley area, all well known in local football circles. He played with both Len Younce and Ward Cuff on Giants teams, and tells that the Oregon State assistant coaches "most certainly are members of the all-time Giants team."

As for Bill Austin, the blond Woodburn heavyweight who played four roussing years at Oregon State prior to joining the Giants, Howell has this to say: "If he hadn't missed those two years while in the Army, Bill would be one of the greatest guards in the professional ranks today."

One Gerald (Jiggs) Burnett, remembered as the Silvertown and Woodburn prep mentor who coached Austin at Woodburn will grin all over when he hears of Howell's testimony on Bill Bill, for we can still hear Burnett insisting that his burly tackle would one day be one of the best in all the land ...

Note too that Austin, at 225 pounds, was the second smallest lineman on the Giants' squad last season. Any collegiate eleven would be overjoyed with a full complement of 225-pounders in its forward wall. But in the pro ranks, where size must accompany speed and coordination, a 225-pounder is too small to play a tackle position ...

Legion Post, Steinke's Win In Junior Ball

Two second-place teams in the C division of the Salem Junior Baseball League, Legion Post 136 and Steinke Truckers, grabbed an even firmer grip on their next-to-best slots when Steinke's downed the 20-30 Club 10-3 and the Legion Post edged out Jackson Jewelers in a 10-9 game.

The Jewelers outbit the Legion team 10-6 in being edged by the single run. The winning run came in the last inning when Willie Christiansen slammed a triple to score Rhett Partie. The Legion Post's big scoring inning was the fourth when they brought home five needed runs. They were scored on a hit batter, four walks, and singles by Partie and Christiansen.

The Jewelers scored four of their runs in the second on singles by Jack Bettes, John Whitfield and Ken Neuberger, with the help of a walk and a catcher's overthrow at third.

Steinke's started their scoring in the first with one run off two triples by Pete Hanley and Harvey Haller. They added two more in the second and five in the fourth. Singles by Dave Kelley, Al Wright, Jerry Duncan and Hanley figured in the fourth in scoring.

They'll Do It Every Time By Jimmy Hatlo

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House-armed services subcommittee which investigated alleged "coddling" of athletes by the Army reported Wednesday "a glaring abuse of pass privileges" and too much granting of "compassionate leave."

Saddlers' Case Example . . . House Slaps Coddling Of Athletes in Army

It pointed the finger of blame, not at the athletes, but at Army field commanders. The subcommittee, headed by Rep. Hess (R-Ohio), recently concluded public hearings during which it checked the service records of a number of big name athletes, including ballplayers and boxers.
