Poor Writing Makes For Empty TV Plays

HOLLYWOOD — MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING: We're wasting to much effort. The finest TV equipment, technical knowledge and loads of cash are combining to elegantly produce action not worth a second glance. The plots fit like a rented bathing suit and the show winds up about as all wet.

We mean these marvelously staged situations in TV drama, mystery and even comedy that can boast the best of equipment, know-how and talent, and right there run out of breath. They cer-tainly can't boast of worthy story material.

The effort that goes into countless episodes of present television plays is much ado about nothing. We witness excellent direction worthy of the best in drama, played against the finest staging shot by experts with a camera, yet see the proving of a weak-kneed point, a moral not worth our bother, a battle won that wasn't actually worth the lifting of a finger, a finger that should have been accusingly pointed at the author of the story instead.

Such writing is the sad result of a neurotic school which permits and even encourages the treating of the insignificant with reverence. The coddling of a nonentity. A chip of beer-bottle glass set in finest platinum, More than silly, it's a criminal waste. Fred A. Niles, vice president of Kling Studios, at a Chicago meeting of the National Federation of Press Women recently, said, "The shortage of competent TV writers is the most serious problem facing the television producer today. The small or medium TV stations provide the best training ground for TV writers."

ever and over we're witnessing the struggle of a hero well acted and masterfully presented but when the curtain falls we shrug and ask "For what?" It's time the producers of such weightless gems asked their writers the same. And those failing to come up with better answer should be gently but firmly led to the
