Antidote for Fear

Earlier this month the Reece committee, which was investigating the charge that some tax-exempt foundations (such as the Rockefeller Foundation) had helped to "finance and promote socialism in the United States," called off its hearings when one of the committee members protested the methods used.

Among those scheduled to testify before the Reece committee was the president of the American Council on Education. A copy of the statement he was to have made has come to our attention; in it President Arthur S. Adams explains why the Council became involved in the investigation. The Reece committee's research director, Norman Dodd, apparently based his argument on the following points:

1. That beginning in 1933, a political 'revolution' took place in the United States, supported by an overwhelming majority of the electorate, which in some of its manifestations seems to the research staff to be un-American.

2. That the approval of this so-called 'revolution' by the electorate resulted from their indoctrination by the nation's educational institutions.

3. That the indoctrination was engineered by a closely knit group of national organizations, including the American Council on Education.

Mr. Adams punctures the argument with some pertinent statistics: Of the U.S. population over 25 years of age in 1932, roughly 88 per cent of the potential electorate, more than 60 per cent received no formal education beyond the eighth grade. That means more than half the voters got their schooling before 1920. The council was founded in 1918 and the various other educational organizations cited were all founded after 1916; He adds:

"The plain fact is that the schools and colleges of this country do not have the power to achieve mass political indoctrina-tion even if they had the desire to do so. ... The only agency in this country capable of mass political indoctrination is the federal government, and even the government could not be successful by controlling the schools alone; it would also have to control schools alone; it would also have to control the pulpit, the press, radio, television, and all other media of mass communication. Mass indoctrination is, therefore, a theoreti-cal as well as a practical impossibility in America today. It simply does not exist. It cannot exist so long as any minority is free to raise its minor. to raise its voice. . . . The alleged conspiracy, also, is a figment of imagination." In a way it is too bad the hearings ended when they did, and Mr. Adams did not get an opportunity to make that strong defense of the schools and his level-headed statement about political indoctrination. The truth of what he says would be a powerful antidote to the panic that has poisoned so many Americans.

No Iron Grip Here

Joe Carson, the Democratic candidate for governor, has made his maiden statewide radio and TV speech, basing his "it's time for a change" appeal on the premise that Oregon has been in "the iron grip of an entrenched political system" for 75 years.

While it is true that Oregon has been largely Republican, it is not accurate to say that the Republicans have an "iron grip" on the state when the inference is that the state lies chained against its will to the GOP machine.

The facts are not sinister, they are simple: Republican voters have predominated in Oregon, and Republican voters tend to elect Republican officials. When the Democratic ticket has offered an outstanding candidate, those same Republican voters sometimes have voted for the Democratic candidate, as was the case when Mrs. Edith Green ran. She lost, but she got a lot of support from both sides.

That Oregon voters keep putting Republicans back into office is no proof that the GOP has the voters buffaloed; it is sometimes merely force of habit, sometimes merely apathy, but more often due to the voters' satisfaction with what the GOP officials have done in the past. And it is also in some cases the fault of the Democrats-when the Democrat candidates appear to be no better than the incumbent Republicans, why should the voters take a chance on a change? As Democratic voter registrations increase in this state, and as the Democratic party persuades its best men to run for public office, the two-party system will be stronger in Oregon.

Meanwhile, let's not kid the voters with this "iron grip" stuff; they're too smart to suffer any unwanted shackles so long as we continue to have free elections and the secret ballot.

Welcome, Mr. President

The announcement that the President will visit Oregon late this summer is welcome news in the state which contributed much to his nomination and election.

Residents of Oregon by the thousands who crowded station platforms all over the state to cheer Ike and Mamie will want to get another look at their favorite and let him know he still has their support.

This trip to Oregon will be different in many ways from the trip in the campaign special. Then, there was the smell and feel of victory in the air. This time there is some doubt. Then, Ike was seeking votes for himself with the esprit of a man who knows in 'his heart that the votes are his, that he has the respect and affection and boundless confidence of the people behind him. This time the President is seeking votes for another man, Senator Cordon, mainly on behalf of the party's control of Congress. And this time there is a feeling of apprehension in the air.

Asks AMA to Help

To the Editor:

Your editorial in the Statesman for July 17, titled "Myopic Surgery" was indeed timely and to the point, and I want to congratulate you for your interest in the, all too often, forgotten people. If the AMA would quit fretting about socialized medicine and turn their interests to the common people it would be to their advantage and to the betterment of humanity. I hope that your editorial reaches the desks of all of the congressmen from Oregon that are now in Wash-ington, D. C.

Mr. Eisenhower, this trip, is an older, and wiser man than in the great election year. His job has been unrelentingly hard and he has worked perhaps harder than ever be-fore, than even during the war years. If sometimes some of his supporters have been a little disillusioned, the President must also at times have felt disillusioned with his supporters.

That is why this trip ought to be a good thing for all concerned. The people will be heartened by the appearance of the President and by his words-they say his speech is already written. And the President in turn should be encouraged and strengthened by the response we feel sure he will get in Oregon. He still has the respect and affection and boundless confidence of many of us.

Such facts as these, in turn, are clear proof that this country is now being treated to an un-conscionable amount of fiddle-faddle by its leaders. The kind of thing that the official leader-ship encourages, and we poor books generally fall for, was well illustrated the other day by the illustrated the other day by the Joint Congressional Committee's report on the new atomic energy Joint Congres worst of their implied untruths. Their worst untruth is the idea that large numbers of A- and H-bombs, in and of themselves, will always give this country the whip hand in the struggle for the world. This idea is the true "Maginot-line thinking" of the postwar period.

In fact, of course, the Soviet American A- and H-bomb stock piles are only one element in the balance of air-atomic pow-er. A-bombs and H-bombs which cannot be delivered are mere expensive toys. In the era of plentiful stocks of the absolute weapons, the ability to deliver the weapons is obviously more im-portant than the weapons them-

Nearly a year has passed since the Soviets tested their H-bomb with lithium hydride core, cap-able of being produced rather rapidly and in large numbers. There is no doubt at all that the Soviets already possess enough A-bombs to inflict terrible wounds on this country. In 18, or 24, or 36 months-for the time is not long—the Soviet A-bomb and H-bomb stockpile will be in the plentiful class.

This in turn confers a somewhat lurid future meaning on the two Soviet guided missiles refer-red to above. For when the Kremlin has enough A- and H-bombs in stock, the missiles can then be fitted with atomic or hydrogen warheads. And when and if that is done, our oversear airbases will, in effect, cease to be dependable assets.

This physical vulnerability of the bases is still quite largely in extra long range air groups. SAC now mainly relies on its superb medium rangebomber, the B-47. These planes can reach Soviet targets from American bases, but only by the difficult, dangerous and time-consuming process of double air-refuelling. If this expedient has to be resort-
