WASHINGTON (AP) - The Atomic Energy Commission Tuesday announced its first special award in the nuclear field - $25,000 - will go to Dr. Enrico Fermi. He is the Italian born Nobel Prize winner who built America's first nuclear reactor which made the A-bomb a reality.

said Fermi also will receive a special citation noting his contributions to basic neutron physics and the achievement of the controlled nuclear chain reaction. The atomic energy act passed by Congress this year authorizes the AEC to make awards for "especially meritorious contributions for the development, use, or control of atomic energy." Fermi's award was recommended by the AEC's General Advisory Committee and approved by President Eisenhower.
