Salem Doctor Received Into National Unit

Dr. Russell L. Guiss, chief surgeon at Oregon State Hospital, is due to return Tuesday from Atlantic City, N.J., where he has just been inducted as a new fellow of the American College of Surgeons. Dr. Guiss attended the five-day national congress of the surgeons' organization.

He came to Salem in 1950 and now, besides his State Hospital duties, is on the visiting staffs of Salem General and Salem Memorial Hospitals and is on the junior staff of Emanuel Hospital, Portland. He also is a clinical instructor in surgery at University of Oregon Medical School and clinics.

Guiss, a 1943 U of O medical graduate, interned at University Hospital, Ann Arbor, Mich. Before coming to Salem he was with University of Oregon Hospital, the U. S. Army in Germany and the Memorial Hospital (for cancer treatment) in New York City.

Fight Muscular Dystrophy

This is a copy of a poster, now appearing nationwide, urging contributions to the Fire Fighters March for Muscular Dystrophy during the Thanksgiving season. A house-to-house canvass seeking funds for research is to be undertaken.

Firemen Seek Fund to Stamp Out Disease

Postmen and firemen join forces this week in a nationwide effort to combat muscular dystrophy now affecting more than 130,000 children in the United States.

The postmen early this week will deliver to most homes in Salem envelopes designed to encourage contributions, and on the two days following Thanksgiving members of the Fire Fighters' Association will call at the homes during evening hours to pick up all donations. The Fire Fighters' Auxiliary will assist.

The campaign to finance research seeking a cure for the baffling disease is sponsored nationally by the Fire Fighters this year. Members throughout this area, as well as those in Salem, will help with the drive. Postmen, sponsors a year ago, are providing the initial contacts for funds.

Leaders of the campaign said anyone missed in the solicitation could mail funds to the Muscular Dystrophy Association, in care of Salem Firemen, or hand an envelope with contributions to any postman.

Gov. Paul Patterson has designated Nov. 21-28 as Muscular Dystrophy Week and urged full support of the drive for research funds.

Zoning, Meter Issues Face City Council

Two zone hearings, at least two parking meter issues and an electric utility extension are among highlights of business scheduled for City Council attention Monday night.

Salem's aldermen when they meet at 7:30 p.m. in City Hall will be asked to authorize extension of Salem Electric service in Northgate Addition where the cooperative utility served before it was annexed to Salem recently.

The proposed extensions are on Edgewood avenue between Greenbriar and Harold streets and on Williams Avenue between city limits and Edgewood.

Also on deck is a resolution to establish a two-hour parking meter zone on 13th Street from State to Ferry. Study also is being given to other possible parking restrictions in other blocks of 13th nearby.

The other parking meter matter is a proposal to restore three parking meters in front of Burrig's Cleaners on Church Street at Ferry.

Hearings will be conducted on proposed zone changes to permit a barber shop location on Broadway St. near Highland School, between Columbia and Grove Streets, and a new Ladd's Market site at 12th and Howard Streets.

Advisers Reject Full-Time Salaried Parole Board Plan

Members of the Governor's Committee on Parole and Probation Saturday turned down a proposal for a full-time salaried parole board and gave qualified approval to a proposed indeterminate sentence law.

The committee's views were contained in a report made public Saturday in Salem. The report was based principally on the findings and recommendations of the National Probation and Parole Association, which conducted a study of the Oregon program.

The committee's report said a full-time salaried parole and probation board probably will be needed in the future. "Such a board will be necessary when and if the Legislature enlarges the duties of the board to a point where it becomes impossible for a part-time board to carry the load," commented State Supreme Court Justice James T. Brant, chairman of the committee.

The report indicated that a substantial number of persons were interviewed with relation to a full-time parole and probation board. Among these was Warden Clarence Gladden of the State Penitentiary.

Gladden told the committee he favored a full-time parole board as a general proposition but realized that better-qualified men might be available as part-time board members than as full-time members.

Comments Offered
Commenting on proposals for an indeterminate sentencing law, the committee's report read: "It was recognized that there is much to be said for the proposal of the National Probation and Parole Association that maximum indeterminate sentences be required in all felony cases and leave to the parole board the power to fix the period of imprisonment after study of each case except in certain cases of life imprisonment specified by statute."
