Legs Prevailing in Soap Cheesecake

By EVE STARK

HOLLYWOOD-We'll go out on a limb: Legs are a very important part of the American scene. Leg art or cheese cake has been the eye-catcher of just about every advertising campaign made and quite naturally came into its own with an early rush on very visual video.

While the shapely limb holds the spotlight exclusively in some plugs, attached anatomy goesalong with it in the usual ad. The leg itself has the toe hold on appeal, however, which accounts for a bevy of six lovely ladies just signing up their gams for a coming string of soap telecommercials.

Just for fun we'll give you the names and when the ads appear you might start a new parlor game by trying to figure out whose calves are whose. Virginia Lee, Patsy Bangs, Dorothy Abbot, Fay Nuell, Gloria DeWord and Betty Hannon are the leggy creatures. We'd say Virginia Lee sounds like the tall, slinky type and Patsy could be a bit kiddish with pins like a drum majorette. You take over from there.

A HIT AND A MISS: A strong comeback was staged by "Studio One" this week after its muddled quandary of the preceding Monday. Unusual in a couple of ways, "Let Me Go, Lover" had good drama and originality, plus the distinction of being the first TV playhouse to launch a vocal recording by a young miss also facing her big first. Songstress Joan Weber made the disc which ran as background and also served as a communication code for the play's harassed disc jockey hero. Top credit should go to adapter

Henry Miscrock who demonstrated fine craftsmanship sharply contrasting with "Studio One's" preceeding job which was an awkward version of Justice Douglas' famous tome on American Freedom. This was a painful example of genius out-geniusing himself and art stripping its gears in a garbled effort to convey a most worthy message that arrived in a tattered and twisted condition. We'll spare the adapter of this hodge-podge the use of his name if "Studio One" will spare us from any more of his ridiculous pipe dreams.

A LAUGH AND A CHILL: Televiewers faced a tough decision Monday evening as "December Bride" faced "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" across the networks. Spring Byington has been pulling them into her excellently rounded out light comedy, and Robert Montgomery was bound to make the first half of his two-part "Hunchback" another powerful

And the author of Robert Montgomery's presentation was also pretty good, being, of course, Victor Hugo who wrote nothing but classics. And Robert made certain that genius was done quite proud. Direction and staging were superb.

A powerful book, a gripping play, a spectacular movie, "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was all of those in the impressively capable hands of a marvelous cast headed by Robert Ellenstein as the grotesquely pitiful "Quasimodo." Too many years have elapsed since the noted Lon Chaney made this character true flesh and blood on the screen for us to draw a comparison, but Robert did all we could ask for of the part.
