Anti-Picketing Case Heard By High Court

Attorneys for labor groups and employers presented arguments before the Oregon Supreme Court Wednesday in a suit to determine whether the state's anti-picketing law is constitutional.

Major controversy Wednesday centered on the definition of free speech, which is guaranteed by the federal and state constitutions. The case before the court is on appeal from Lane County Circuit Court, where Judge William G. East called the law unconstitutional.

The section of the law over which the dispute has arisen is one which prohibits any person from picketing a firm unless he has been recognized as bargaining representative under federal or state law.

The State Federation of Labor and State Industrial Union Council, represented by their attorneys, maintained in court that this section denies free speech because it restricts peaceful picketing.

Lawyers for the employers argued that the state has a right to limit picketing under the police power. The right of free speech is not involved, they said.

The suit was brought by Julius and Carmen Gilverson, owners of a Eugene drive-in restaurant, against a local of the AFL-CIO Culinary Alliance and Bartenders Union.

Attending the hearing were members of the Senate Labor and Industries Committee, who are considering a bill which would repeal the controversial law.

Oregon GOP Leaders Plan Salem Meet

Republican chairmen, party leaders and office holders have scheduled a meeting in Salem, Thursday, Feb. 3, at the Senator Hotel.

Arrangements for the session, which will include workshops in the morning, are being made by the Marion County Central Committee and Ed G. Boehnke, Eugene, Republican central committee chairman, who called the meeting.

Two work meetings, one for county finance chairmen and the other for county chairmen, vice chairmen and central committee officers, will begin at 10 a.m. The noon luncheon will have Secretary of State Earl T. Newberry and State Treasurer Sigfrid B. Unander as speakers.

Governor Paul Patterson will be the banquet speaker at 7 p.m. that night. Special banquet invitations to all Republican state senators and representatives are expected to attract about 250 to that event.

Court Awards Judgments to Four Firms

Four firms were awarded a judgment of $37,792 against the operators of a hatchery and poultry farm Wednesday in a decree handed down by Judge George R. Duncan in Marion County Circuit Court.

Pioneer Trust Co., plaintiff, sought settlement of a mortgage on Lloyd A. and Ada C. Lee's property, consisting of two lots of five acres each in Hampden Park and known as the Lloyd A. Lee Hatchery and Poultry Farm, 5310 Center St.

Named also as defendants by the trust company were Williamette Production Credit Association; Harvest Milling Co. and the Quaker Oats Co. All hold mortgages on the land, but Pioneer Trust wanted its claim to have first priority.

Judge Duncan held in his decree that the other mortgages were "inferior in right and subsequent in time" to the mortgage held by the trust firm. He held its claim to be paramount, and the credit association, milling firm and oats company claims to follow for settlement in that order.

The three firms had filed cross-complaints against the trust company, contending they should have first priority. Judge Duncan ordered the mortgages foreclosed and the following judgments paid: To the trust company, $15,542. To the credit association, $6,700; milling company, $4,625, and to the oats firm, $10,925. Attorney's fees of $1,889 were also awarded to the firm.

Also named as defendants were Everett D. and Theresa M. Crabtree; Richard B. and Cleta Marie Jennings; Richard P. and Jo Ann Lankow, doing business as the C. and K. Lumber Co.
