

Miracle Party Clothes...

MODERN GLAMOR GIRL... Lorraine Lee Hindman, of Los Angeles, is dressed in party finery of the age of chemistry. Her pink nylon dotted Swiss dress, designed by Helen Fenton of California, can be washed in a jiffy, needs no ironing. Her clear plastic slickerette and umbrella are sprinkled with rhinestone sparkles, keep her glamorous even in the rain.

The age of chemistry makes life more fun for modern small fry and easier for their mothers. Time was when party dresses were reserved for only the most special occasions, since their dainty ruffles and lace frills took hours to wash and iron after each wearing. But nylon and the other miracle fibers have changed all that.

Nowadays little girls can wear party dresses every day if they like—as sheer and frilly as the most particular glamor girl could desire. Yet Mom needs only to wash them through suds in the washbowl at night, along with her nylon stockings, rinse and hang them up, and they're ready to wear again next morning, with no ironing, and every fluted frill in place.

California designers have made spectacular use of sheer nylons and plastics in children's wear for this spring. Cobwebby pastel organdies and dotted Swiss fabrics, all in nylon, are used for some of the daintiest party dresses on which little girls ever spilled ice cream. Only it doesn't matter if these frilly frocks get soiled in one wearing, because they can be rinsed out in a few minutes and be fresh as ever in an hour.

Transparent plastics also are used for glamorous party rainwear for the kindergarten set and their big sisters. So small charmers can step out to a party, rain or shine, dressed completely in the last word in man-made fabrics, impervious to spots or water, yet looking as fragile as the garments of a fairy princess.

Most of these new and practical dress-up styles for small fry are reasonably priced, and should bring joy to the hearts of mothers and daughters alike.
