Buried Alive in Snow for 8 Days, Man Found Safe

TARNABY, Northern Sweden (P) - A Swedish hunter, buried under an avalanche, was found alive Sunday by his brother after lying eight days under the snow. A movie ticket saved his life.

Evert Stenmark, 23, of Umasjo, left home Jan. 21 to go ptaramigan shooting in the Lappland Mountains.

His brother, Kjell, leading a search party, noticed a birch twig with a red movie ticket attached, sticking out of the snow. The men started digging and three feet down in the snow they found the missing

The avalanche had locked his skis so he could not move his legs. During the days and nights he lay covered he lived on three ptarmigan he had shot. He managed to fasten the movie ticket on the birch twig and thrust it to the surface in the faint hope it would be noticed.

He suffered badly from frostbite, but doctors believed he would recover.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (8) -Soviet Russia proposed a ceasefire here Sunday for the Formosa area, but coupled it with a demand for U.S. withdrawl of all its armed forces from the area.

In effect, Russia called for surrender of the offshore islands without a struggle and a clear path to conquer Formosa and the Pescadores, which the United States has undertaken to protect.

The Russians, in presenting a draft resolution for the U.N. Security Council, added a violent attack on what it called U.S. aggression against Red China. The move came on the eve of a

Security Council meeting, called by New Zealand and backed by the Western powers, to discuss a ceasefire for all the offshore China islands from the Tachens down through Quemoy. Steps Plannei

The Soviet delegation circulated its draft resolution while the Western powers still were consulting on the steps they planned to take at the meeting Monday morning (11 a.m. EST).

The move, in line with recent Soviet and Chinese Communist propaganda attacks on U.S. policy in the Far East, lent strength to the forecast of a long and bitter word battle in the council, especially if the Chinese Communists agree to send representatives for the de-
