Sprague Back From Chicago Rail Hearing

Charles A. Sprague, publisher of The Oregon Statesman, returned Monday night from Chicago where he and other members of a railroad labor dispute emergency board have been holding hearings. The hearings lasted 26 days.

Mrs. Sprague, who has been in Richmond, Calif., during Sprague's absence, returned to Salem Saturday.

The Order of Railway Conductors and Brakemen are demanding a wage rate based on the weight on the drivers of locomotives drawing their trains. Engineers and firemen are paid on that basis now.

Sprague said he and other emergency board members will go to Washington, D. C., toward the end of this month to file the resulting report with President Eisenhower.

Death Claims Lee Hodges; Rites Friday

Lee Hodges, 58, a carpenter until illness forced his retirement, died Monday night at his Salem home.

Hodges came here 12 years ago from Hutchinson, Kan., and before that lived in Rockford, Ill., where he married the former Irene Brown, who survives him. He was born March 27, 1896 at Eversonville, Mo.

Besides his widow he leaves four daughters and six sons and stepsons, a brother Tom Hodges, Nunn, Colo., and 21 grandchildren. The children are Mrs. Phyllis Harris and Mrs. Shirley Fisher, Salem; Mrs. Twila Roper, LaGrande, Ore.; Mrs. Anna Mae Sletten, Frost, Minn.; Leo Hodges and Henry and David Moon, Salem; Jim Hodges and John Moon, Tacoma; Lester Moon, Hutchinson, Kan.

Services will be 10:30 a.m. Friday at the Virgil T. Golden Funeral Home. Burial will be at Rest Lawn Memory Garden. Rev. Robert Luther will officiate.
