Comic Says He Isn't Comic at All

By EVE STARR

HOLLYWOOD — Jack Carson, the comic, is the first to tell anyone who will listen that he is not a comic. "I," Carson says, "am not a comic." That's just the way he says it. "I," he says, "am not a comic." No matter how you read it, it comes out the same way. He is not a comic.

That may come as something of a blow to the sponsor of his current comedy bit on NBC, alternating every fourth week with Red Buttons (there are people who don't think he's a comic, either), but the face remains as stated. Carson's forte, as he has proved rather brilliantly on two recent occasions, is straight dramatic acting.

Just a few months ago Jack flew into New York to do something on the award-winning U. S. Steel Hour with the odd title of "Goody In It Doesn't Go Away." In it, he ran the gamut from phony heel to slob.

Then just the other week he did another one for U. S. Steel—the first star, incidentally, to rate a return engagement on the show. This one was called "Man in the Corner," with Jack playing an easy-going, easily-pun-upon worker in a machine shop who finally turns on his tormentors and, to his agreeable surprise, not only gets away with it but becomes something of a big man.

Jack's movie work, of course, has always given at least a hint of his capabilities. And, also of course, it has taken television to get around to exploiting the man's full potential. It is to TV's credit that he was even listened to, much less agreed with, when he made the plaintive statement that he was not a comic.

SHORT SHOTS: Red Skelton and Ethel Merman will do another show-stoppers routine on the April 14 "Shower of Stars." And if they don't do exactly that, they'll do something else. Anyway, both their signatures are down on the proper pieces of contractual paper for the April 14 show. . . . Same show is on the verge of signing Marguerite Pi-

"Pop says that asking for money for a grubstake is an old come-on prospecting—and to leave it alone."

"I was afraid of that, Corky."

"But he didn't seem like that kind of a fellow. Hope, and he could be on the square."

"Maybe he has struck a uranium deposit which will make him and us rich."

"$500 for a grubstake is a lot of money and we can't afford it."

"We could raise it, but you're right. I just hope we don't lose any million-dollar regrets."
