GE Theater Show Comes Near Goal

By EVEL STARR

STARREVE: Last fall the statement was made and duly noted that GE Theater, with screen star Ronald Reagan acting as both host and script supervisor in addition to taking on occasional starring role, would take it upon itself to be different.

Considering the general sameness of most half-hour dramatic shows, the promise was taken with a grain of salt in more than one quarter. There's a vast difference, it was felt, between wanting to be unusual and actually accomplishing the feat by gambling with a sponsor's money. Most sponsors, all things considered, hate to gamble with anything but the mess around with it? Give us the formula. Let somebody else do the gambling."

Reagan, however, in concert with production boss Alan Miller, has been singularly successful in getting away with the kind of off-beat stories most such shows would turn down instantly. And through a unique "share the ownership" plan, GE Theater has been able to come up with a roster of star names that has been little short of remarkable. They include Jack Benny, Henry Fonda, James Stewart, Jane Wyman, Madeline Carroll, Jackie Cooper, George Montgomery, Fred MacMurray and Cornel Wilde—many of them marking their TV debuts with the show.

Story quality has, for the most part, been equal to the name value. Eva Marie Saint, a comparative newcomer whose name is not yet quite on a par with that of, say, Jane Wyman, was handed a role. Miss Wyman might well have turned down—the lead in "Mr. Death and the Redhead Woman."

George Montgomery, too, was given a fantasy—the story of Gentleman Jim Corbett coming back to earth to fight Joe Louis.

As a result, GE Theater has found itself among the first 10 in more than one rating system, a place it has held virtually alone among the dramatic shows. Surely this must be proof enough that the viewing audience has not committed itself to an exclusive diet of formula shows.
