Jack Webb Looking For Sgt. Thursday

By EVE STARR
HOLLYWOOD—STARR REPORT: Jack Webb, who has parlayed a police sergeant into an American institution single-handed and even contributed to American manners by bringing the wonderfully old-fashioned "Yes, ma'am" back into popular repute, is now looking for a way out.
With "Dragnet" now approaching the end of its fourth season on TV and sixth on radio, Webb feels that not only the viewer but he himself is ready for a change. The sticker is that the show still has two seasons to go under the present sponsorship, with a total of 55 films still to be made.
Jack's problem is to make some sort of change that will be acceptable to the sponsor and which at the same time will get him out from under. What he wants to do is promote Sgt. Friday to Lieutenant and bring a new actor in—a Sgt. Thursday, as it were—to carry the ball with Ben Alexander. That would reduce Jack to a minor role in the show, which is what he wants, and he would appear in perhaps one out of every three or four episodes although continuing to serve as producer-director.
This column, along with several million viewers, has often wondered just how long a police ser-gent could continue to be such a valuable asset to his department and still not earn himself a promotion. Webb has felt the same way, of course, but he also felt there was no point in tampering with the show's format so long as it continued to be such a howling success. He feels now, however, that the show is over the hump and that a change would be beneficial rather than harmful.

About a year ago, when dum-dum-dum was virtually replacing The Star Spangled Banner as the national anthem, Jack made this cryptic remark to us one hot afternoon at the Disney lot where the show is filmed: "Thank heaven," he said fervently, "for Liberace."
Liberace, at that time, was just beginning to reach his own peak and the publicity on the piano player was finally cutting into the space being devoted to "Dragnet." Jack, at the time, was afraid his show would be run right into the ground and was delighted to have Liberace come along to take the play away from him.
If Webb can convince his sponsor that the public is ready for a new sergeant, he'll get started with "Pete Kelly's Blues" by June, 1956—and that show, of course, is his real baby. He needs the change to keep his remarkable enthusiasm at its customary high pitch, and it's no secret that his enthusiasm for "Dragnet" is beginning to wear thin at the edges. "After all," he says, "there are just so many different kinds of crime and we've done every one of them two or three times."

What he doesn't say, and what is chiefly remarkable about the show, is that it is his own talent and integrity that has kept "Dragnet" from deteriorating long since into a routine cops-and-robbers affair. With almost any other man at the helm, "Dragnet" would have dropped out of the top five shows two years ago. His rare brand of talent, and we are not speaking of him as an actor, is hardly of the dime-a-dozen variety. Hollywood could use a lot more like him. But then, that's what makes him unique—there's just aren't any more like him.
