For the benefit of some anglers who have been misled into Pirates to their first triumph of thinking that ultra-fine leaders, camouflaged leaders, camouflaged the campaign, scattering eight lines, etc., are invisible to the fish, let us make it clear here that Philadelphia hits. Only Del Ennis' lines, etc., are invisible to the fish, let us make it clear here that they are definitely NOT invisible to the fish.

they are definitely NOT invisible to the fish. Obviously we can see the finest leader or tied 1-1 when the game was called. we would not be able to tie a fly or a hook to it. If we can see the leader the fish can see it. In fact a fish can see insect larvae in the water so minute that we cannot see it. Yet, some fishing tackle manufacturers will announce a new leader or line so well camouflaged or so fine that "fish cannot see it." The success of using the fine leader lies not in the fact that fish cannot see it but in the action which only a fine leader can give a fly or a single egg. On the other hand, a mono-fil spinning line can be too fine for lure fishing. One can go to such extremes that there is no control over the lure. It merely acts dead in the water, except on the retrieve itself. We have seen, many times, proof that a leader although visible to the fish does not necessarily frighten the fish. It may impart a "give-away" false action to the fly or bait which will cause the fish to become suspicious and turn away, but it will not scare the fish.
