Cover pictures and synopsis of contents has been the basis of the culling, handled principally by store checkers Mickey Hickman and Mary Smith. Hickman, who censors the pocketbooks and magazines, says his effort is "making my stand for God."

Public reaction to the censoring has so far been good, reports Hughes who said many of his patrons had commented favorably on the "clean" look of the magazine department. "Magazines are a small part of our business and it wouldn't make such difference if they were all taken out," says Hughes.

Take them out was what one supplying agency threatened to do when the store turned back the unwanted books, but so far they haven't made good on the Still on the stands this week however were copies of 11 detective and expose' type magazines, several of them carrying cover pictures and inside photos as suggestive as any of the bosomy covers on the pocketbooks.
