Abandoned Kangaroo Okeh, Growing Despite Treatment

BALTIMORE (AP) — "Josie" is in a pretty tough spot — her ma won't let her back in the pouch.

That's a fine pickle for a kangaroo to be in.

Arthur Watson, director of the Baltimore zoo, is doing all he can to help the baby. He took her from her errant ma and put her in a foster home where maybe eshe will be appreciated.

Mrs. Luella Earl, who has a tender regard for orphaned zoo dwellers, is caring for Josie at home and feeding her with an eye dropper.

Josie s ma, a frightful perfectionist, expelled the waif apparently because it was slightly crippled, said Watson.

The big red giant from Australia turned her nose up on Josie just because she limped and couldn't get back in the pouch of her own accord.

Well, maybe Josie won't need the pouch. Kangaroos are born no bigger than your thumb nail and do the rest of their growing in the safety of their mothers' pouches.

But Josie has become a pretty big girl now — 10 inches tall — and maybe she won't need her temperamental mother any more.

Dr. Robert P. Wagers, a veterinarian, says a tendon slipped out of place in Josie's left hind leg. He thinks surgery can be avoided and the tendon can be slipped back into place through application of a cast.

"Josie", it should be pointed out, is not the baby's official name. But baby kangaroo's are called Joey in Australia and this one is a girl.

Meanwhile, nameless or not, the baby is doing fine hobbling around on her cast in the Earl home.

But, look, ma — no pouch.

Park Policy Set For Subdivisions

PORTLAND (AP) — Multnomah County commissioners decided Thursday that new housing subdivisions are to be assessed $37.50 a lot for park purposes.

The county may, however, accept land donations for park purposes in a subdivision, rather than the lot assessment cash.

The action was part of a program to establish parks in built-up areas outside Portland.
