

Uranium Ore Termed 'Best' Yet' in Oregon

PORTLAND (UP) — The "best uranium prospect discovered in Oregon" so far was reported by a geologist Tuesday to have been found in the southeastern part of the state.

Tom Matthews of the State Department of Geology and Mineral Industries, added that samples brought in by Harold Davis from the Steens mountain area "probably is pay material."

The find was located about 50 miles north of the Nevada border on U.S. government land, some 10 miles north of Andrews on Pike creek.

Matthews said samples "just barely" meet the minimum requirements of the Atomic Energy Commission for commercial quality ore. The AEC requires a minimum uranium content of .1 per cent "and that is just what Davis' samples are," Matthews said. He said he plans to send a representative of the department to the site to check it.

Davis is a former merchant marine chief mate who lives in Milwaukie. He said he and his partner, Dewey Quier of Burns, discovered the deposit June 22 after a four-month search. They have staked about 40 claims in the area.

Hair-raising Researchmen, Or Just Hair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Simon Klosky explained to Congress the difference between a short-haired and a long-haired researchman.

Testifying before the House Appropriations Committee, Klosky, acting chief of the Oil Shale Branch of the Bureau of Mines said: "We have at Laramie (Wyo.) a station, a research station. I can say this because my hair is short. We have at that station what we called the long-haired researchmen."

"What is the difference between a long-haired and a short-haired researchman?" Rep. Jensen (R-Iowa) inquired.

"The long-haired man is working on the frontier, of anything, while the short-haired man is working behind, trying to develop what has been discovered," Klosky replied.

New Hands Give Old Clock New Lease on Life

NEW YORK (AP) — The big Colgate clock in Jersey City, N.J., visible to Manhattan's millions across the Hudson River, has stopped for the first time since it started ticking in 1924.

Over the years, the huge wooden hands of this largest timepiece in the world have become porous — on muggy days they absorb moisture and throw the clock out of kilter.

The clock was stopped so the hands could be replaced with steel and aluminum ones.
