Forage Crop Seed Values Show Decline

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
 Farm Editor, The Statesman
 While the nation's farmers paid more for hay and pasture seeds this past spring, they aren't going to get as much for the seeds of forage crops this year as they did a year ago.
 Dealers interviewed this week were on the cagey side, most of them saying, "We are rather marking time for the present." Growers were much of the same opinion, showing no particular eagerness to sell at the present. However, harvest in the Willamette Valley's big grass fields is just getting well underway. A few small lots were cleaned late last week. Most of the grass seeds remain yet to be harvested.
 Reports from the Agricultural Marketing Service Monday showed that retail prices for all seeds for spring purchase averaged 11 per cent above 1954. Red Clover showed the greatest increase—72 per cent. Kentucky Blue Grass seed retail price, however, was down the most this spring as compared to a year ago—37 per cent.

July Prices Noted
 July prices, listed by the Oregon Seed and Feed Dealers Price Reporting Committee showed that common ryegrass, generally was being quoted in 100 pound bags at $7, although one dealer was offering but $6.75.
 Perennial Ryegrass (blue tag) dealers were offering $11 when they were offering $11 when they were offering. Some dealers just said they were not buying. Buyers for Alta fescue blue tag said the price was $8 to $10 "if anyone is buying." Calls around showed a few were; a lot were not. Valley Chewings' Fescue was unsteady between $20 and $23 a 100-pounds cleaned and sacked. Eastern Oregon was getting from $21 to $24 for Chewings, and $24 for Penn State fescue. Creeping red fescue offers in the Willamette Valley was $20 although very little interest was showing in this. Eastern Oregon's Creeping price this week is listed at $23 for creeping and $24 for Illahee, and $74 creeping.

Northern Alfalfa seed, ladino clover, common and certified tall fescue, are now listed for the first time as available for export sale.
 Another way of saying that there's an oversupply of grain and that prices will not be too good is the constant reminder that "cheaper feed will help livestock feeders make a profit this season."

Barley Fields Good
 Pacific Northwest markets reported the first arrival of new-crop wheat and barley this week, but this wasn't from the Willamette Valley. Barley in the valley is looking unusually well from a field-standpoint. However, in a few fields, where not much fertilizer was applied, the growth is comparatively thin.

Cash trading in the grain market this past week was slow as buyers held back for a good look. Sellers, too, now supplied with plenty of storage space, showed no eagerness to sell, terminals reported. Old-crop barley prices dropped as much as $1.50 to $2 at Pacific Northwest markets. At the same time, new-crop barley went up as much as $1 a ton. The new crop is coming in later than expected this year. New-crop No. 2 western barley, testing 45 pounds, was being quoted at $46 a ton, 15-day delivery. The San Francisco barley market, while quiet, showed steadiness. Farm economists were warning farmers this week that barley sells lowest at harvest time and that grain farmers should be in no hurry to part with it. They expect the demand to go up later, and with a rising demand there will also be rising prices in barley, the economists said.

Russ Radio Airs Ike Talk

MOSCOW (AP) — In an unprecedented move, Moscow radio Tuesday night broadcast the text of President Eisenhower's Monday night TV-radio report to the American people on the Geneva summit meeting. The full text also was carried by the official Soviet news agency Tass for newspaper publication.
 Never before in the memory of Westerners living in Moscow has a speech by a Western statesman been quoted here in full.

The account of the President's broadcast included his remark about the wide gulf so far dividing East and West — a gulf as wide and deep as are the differences between individual freedom and regimentation.

The Moscow radio report took 15 minutes to broadcast.

House Passes Militia Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Tuesday passed and sent to the Senate a measure authorizing the states to create local militias.
 The purpose is to create a core of men in each state trained to handle local wartime problems, in case national guard units are called to federal duty in an emergency. Militia forces then would be expanded.

This plan was part of President Eisenhower's original blueprint for expanding the military reserves. Deleted from that measure, the militia provisions were incorporated in a separate measure.
