

'Discoverer' of Lana Finds Hollywood Will Give Anyone Chance

(Editors note: Aline Mosby is on vacation. Guest columnist today is producer-director Mervyn Leroy, one of the discoverers of Lana Turner, who gives tips to hopefuls looking for success.)

By MERVYN LEROY
HOLLYWOOD (UP)—Whenever you see a pretty girl or a nice-looking young man someone invariably says, "You ought to be in pictures."

Most of the general public deems this impossible. Hollywood isn't an impossible place to find the proverbial pot of gold. This year marks my 30th year in movies as a producer-director. I still say if you have ability and heart you have a chance to succeed in our land of stars.

Courage, Determination
There are many examples of those who made good in our industry by courage and determination. The young dancer who came west over 20 years ago to seek her fortune and remained through tears, trials and tribulations to win a coveted Academy Award—her name is Joan Crawford.

A former newspaper copyboy, who worked for three dollars a week, is one of Hollywood's greatest cameramen—Joseph Ruttenberg.

Then there's a girl named Muriel who acted in school plays in New Jersey. Now Muriel is Teresa Wright who has won an academy award and been nominated for three others.

Don't forget Van Johnson, who existed on one hot dog a day back in New York, waiting for a chance as a chorus boy and the break that brought him here.

Life is beginning today for some person who never dared think good fortune and his heart's desire could really happen to him.

The password is "talent." You don't have to possess important connections; your father doesn't have to know the head of the studio. You can succeed under your own power.

Never graduated
No one ever gave me anything, even an education. I never graduated from any school, even grade school. That didn't hold me back. This background was the greatest thing that ever happened to me because it made me realize I must never stop learning, and I never have.

I was born with a wooden spoon in my mouth, and it was a better break than being born with a gold one. Kids who have it easy don't have the same incentive and drive to prove they have something.

I used to sell newspapers in San Francisco. In the mornings I sold them in front of the St. Francis Hotel. At night I got the theater trade in front of the Alcazar.

After the premiere of "Quo Vadis" at the Warfield Theater in San Francisco, I walked six blocks to the Alcazar Theater. You see, I directed "Quo Vadis."

Welcome Home, Brother

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—Susan Breese, 3, gives an affectionate welcome to her 8-year-old brother, Peter, as he steps from a bus on his return from a summer camp where he has been convalescing from polio. They are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Breese of St. Louis. Susan's left arm was broken in a fall the day Peter left for camp two weeks ago. Looking on at extreme right is Mrs. Breese. Finder of $20 Bill in Salem Learns He Can't Give It Away

A Seattle resident, through Salem for the first time in several weeks, turned up at Salem police station Sunday with a $20 bill he said he wanted to turn in.

He found it on Portland road about six weeks ago, he said. Desk Sgt. Walter Espin, scanning the regulation $20 bill with President Jackson on the front, observed there would be no way for a claimant to identify it apart from other $20 bills. That being so, the finder was legally entitled to keep it, the sergeant said.

The Seattle visitor, however, said he wanted to leave the $20 at the police station.

The desk sergeant, by this time backed three or four feet away from the counter, replied that the police department has no way of accounting for such money.

Still proffering the bill, the Seattle man said he'd be satisfied to exchange it for a police department receipt.

The desk officer countered with the observation that since it was found on a public highway, it was out of Salem police jurisdiction. The visitor, however, said he found it inside of town near a drive-in.

"Here, give me a receipt," he said, extending the $20 across the counter while the officer maintained his stance at least eight feet away, his arms folded over his chest.

"No, I don't want your money," replied the officer with a fair display of authority.

He then volunteered to check the lost files, but found no missing $20 bill reported in the last three months.

"If they didn't take enough interest in it to report it—maybe it fell out of an airplane," said he, changing tack.

After a little more quibbling, the finder left the station with his $20, but shortly returned and gave his name and address so he could be informed if it is ever claimed.

SEATTLE (UP)—A 9-year-old boy possibly terrorized by a nightmare fell seven floors to his death from a window ledge of the Seattle Y. M. C. A. Saturday night.

He was William Neal Burton, West Vancouver, B. C. He, his brother, John 14, and his father, Frederick Burton, were here on a holiday trip.

The father, a watchmaker, said the boy had been ill and feverish and was sleeping alone in his room. He saw him about 15 minutes before the plunge.

Jerry O'Brien, 35, Raymond, reported. Police Detective Steve Dimak said, that he saw the boy break out a window, climb out on the ledge, and call out: "He's after me." The boy climbed along the ledge several feet, apparently trying to reach a stairwell, before falling.

The father said he was in another room with his other son while William slept.

Worm Farming Business Grows In Nebraska Area
WOLBACH, Neb. (UP)—Worm farms are popping up in increasing numbers in this area.

Half a dozen businessmen here have gone into the worm-raising business.

It is not uncommon to see the men armed with spade, rule and can, moving up and down the alleys. Every once in awhile the men will stop, stoop, dig a worm out of the soil and start measuring—it the worm will be quiet long enough.

The worms are measured for length, diameter and maneuverability.

If a worm lacks the ability to wiggle while being held by the head or tail it is discarded. Worm farmers point out that if a worm isn't active enough it won't attract the attention of fish.

Captured worms are moved to "farms"—specially built pens where they are fed fattening foods. The pens vary from 3 by 4 to 3 by 6 feet and have a substantial floor underneath them.

The farmer's wife is instructed to toss all the coffee grounds and vegetable waste into the dirt-filled pens.

Well-fed worms will produce about 100 offspring a year.

Lady Marine Press Agent 'Sells' Band

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON (UP)—Jimmie Pickel is one Marine who isn't expected to do much fighting.

As a matter of fact, "Jimmie" is just a nickname, and S. Sgt. Virginia Ann Pickel is very much a lady. If she does any fighting at all, it is merely to sass the 100 men who surround her.

"Actually," she told me over lunch, "we get along fine."

"Jimmie" is publicity director of the United States Marine Band. It was quite a switch for her when she took over the job on the retirement of S. Sgt. Margie Moore not long ago.

The new press agentness has a distinction no other person in the service can claim in a comparable job. She holds two college degrees neither of which has anything to do with music, although she had heard of the treble clef when she took over.

"Oh," she said, "I used to dabble a little with the mandolin, but I didn't get very far with it."

At Temple University in Philadelphia she majored in athletics and education, and came out with a bachelor of science degree. Later she taught athletics, such as basketball, lacrosse, tennis, track, hockey and other sports.

A Masters Degree
That was after she got her masters degree in education at Northwestern University.

"Jimmie" was listening to the radio one day in 1951 and heard there was need for lady Marines. So she joined up.

The oboe player, tuba boys and bassoonists give her no trouble at all. It is not, of course, her job to teach the enlisted bandmen to toodle. That work is left to Capt. Albert Schoepfer, who knows his music from "A" to "G" including all of the combinations in flats and sharps.

"Jimmie" and the rest of the Marines are proud of the sit-down or string band which is on call at all times for concerts at the White House and other places. One of the sergeant's duties is to run around to the newspapers to let the word get out that the stringers or the big band are going to play.

State College Enrollment Jump Seen

EUGENE (Special)—State higher education administrators have agreed that collegiate enrollments next month will exceed the eight per cent increase predicted six months ago.

Enrollments last fall were up 14 per cent over fall of 1953 and increases of eight per cent in 1955 and another eight per cent in 1956 were estimated for legislative appropriation purposes.

Since the session adjourned in May, however, inquiries at campus registrar offices have far exceeded expectations.

Beginning dates for the colleges and the university, their 1954 enrollment and predicted enrollment for 1955 fall term are: Oregon State College, September 26, 5214-5600; University of Oregon, September 26, 4435-4800; Eastern Oregon College of Education, September 27, 651-650; Southern Oregon College of Education, September 27, 702-750; Portland State College, September 26, 2367-2720; Dental School of the University of Oregon, October 5, 323-324; University of Oregon Medical School, October 4, 581-581.
