

Security System 'Needs Overhaul,' Probe Chairman Asserts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D-SC) said Wednesday three days of hearings have shown the government personnel security system is being "run in a slipshod manner and needs an overhaul."

Sen. Carlisle (R-Kan.) agreed that some improvements can be made.

The hearings wound up another round in an investigation by the subcommittee, which Johnston heads. More will be held in two or three weeks, Johnston said. Highlighting Wednesday's activities were:

1. A declaration by Johnston that Carlisle is getting vital information necessary to the investigation but that the administration is withholding it from the chairman and the subcommittee staff. Carlisle told newsmen: "I certainly have no secret information. I have no secret files."

2. Testimony by an honorably discharged Navy veteran that the Navy fired him as a security risk "because of my parents" and never told him what was wrong with them. Joseph H. Summers Jr., 26, of Providence, R.I., said he knew no reason for the charges or for questioning the loyalty of his mother and father.
3. The unfolding of the story of a Negro clerk at the Veterans Administration, Mrs. Beatrice Campbell, who said she went through the "nightmare" and "heartbreak" of a four months' security suspension before her name was cleared and her job restored.

4. A review of the widely publicized case of Abraham Chasnow, who said he went through "indescribable torture" during 13 months of suspension without pay from his Navy Department position in Washington.

The three days of hearings have concentrated mainly on bringing out the stories of individuals who have been branded security risks, and receiving recommendations from spokesmen for various organizations for changes in the personnel security setup.

Summers, a chunky, dark-haired youth dressed in a tan corduroy jacket and charcoal gray slacks, was the lead-off witness Wednesday. In complete seriousness, he said that "Well, I was in the Boy Scouts," but never belonged to any disloyal organizations.

His mother, Mrs. Pauline Summers, also of Providence, testified that she never had belonged to an organization she knew to be sympathetic with the Communist Party.

She said she had no knowledge that her retired husband ever was charged with Communist connections in his 27 years as a public school teacher.
