This is no less true in the small logging center of Renfrew than in this capital of the vast Canadian dominion.

In a Renfrew super-market, a grocery list prepared in Washington, D. C., could be filled with few substitutes, even as to brand name products. Some American firms have built plants in Canada to serve this big market north of the border, but they turn out bran flakes, shredded wheat and other products of American origin. From soup to nuts, the story

Tobacco From Virginia

Cigarettes are something of an exception. Canadians are exhorting by billboards to light up a Black Cat, a Pleasure or a Sweet Coporal at prices substantially higher than Americans are accustomed ot paying. A pack of McDonalds, its cover marked by a lady highlander in kilts, runs 34c. Close inspection discloses that its tobacco is importedfrom the Commonwealth of Virginia, U.S.A.

It was a singularly unique experience to stop by the side of the road one Sunday afternoon and hear the authentic whining of a bagpipe drifting out from a plain frame house many miles west of the capital.

Canada is obviously busting with pride over the accomplishment of a local girl. And when headline writers here simply call her Marilyn, Canadian readers know they are referring not to Hollywood's Miss Monroe but to Toronto's Miss Bell who is just for new industry. back from her successful swim of the English Channel.
