HOLLYWOOD-CRITIC'S COR-NER: Judy Garland's debut on TV, for which she reportedly was paid $125,000, was perhaps the biggest disappointment to her California friends since Swaps ran second at who should be shot at dawn. This first CBS "spectacular' never got spectacular until its five minutes when Judy broke her heart and everyone else's trying to fight her way through "Over the Rainbow" with no voice and no breath. The ovation she received from a VIP studio audience watching the show on monitors in an adjoining studio was a tribute to her courage more than anything

The show got off to a bad start right off the bat when Judy made her first appearance in a loose fitting gown that made her look like a tub of butter. In fact, the studio audience gasped. On top of that, she had no voice. Laryngitis had caught up with her the day before the show. A trouper like Garland can talk her way through a song and get away with it, but unfortunately several of her numbers had been pre-recorded and the audience was thus faced with the uncomfortable puzzler of hearing her sing like a bird one minute and croak like a crow the next.

Judy's biggest assist came from David Wayne, a pixie-like lad whose "Actor Cat" number was a show stopper, and from a group of five zany musicians called The Goofers. Judy herself, one of the greatest stars of show business, never stopped the show until it was almost over. but those last five minutes added up to one of the great bits of TV history. All things considered, however, it was a pretty expensive five minutes

Color TV has rarely been done such a disservice. I watched the show on two sets, color and black and white, placed alongside one another. Instinctively, I found myself watching a good

TV Network Chief Blasts Film Costs

LOS ANGELES M-The high cost of motion picture films which are made available to television has forced networks to rely increasingly on live pro-gramming, the president of CBS-TV testified Tuesday.

J. L. Van Volkenburg of New York was called by U.S. government attorneys as a witness in the anti-trust suit brought by the government against five motion picture studios.

The network chief, appearing on the stand only a few minutes, said that in television's early days the movie studios did not make their films available to the new medium.

When the studios got around to making them available later, Van Volkenburg said, the film prices were so prohibitive that the TV stations had to concentrate on live shows.

Van Volkenburg also said that a film for TV use cost $125 in 1948, but that one of the same quality now would cost $10,000.

The trial started Sept. 22 before Judge Leon Yankwich. U.S. Atty. Samuel Flatow said then that the government would try to prove that there has been a conspiracy on the part of five movie studios to withhold their products from TV stations and to restrict exhibition of 16-mm prints so the latter would not compete with 35-mm prints used in movie theaters.

Defense Atty. Homer Mitchell has said that all movie studio actions have been based on sound | business judgment. He denied
