The Regime to Seek 'Reasonable' Funds For 2 Valley Dams

By A. ROBERT SMITH (Statesman Correspondent)

WASHINGTON—The Eisenhower administration is preparing to ask Congress for "a reasonable" amount of additional funds next year to continue construction of Cougar and Hills Creek Dams for flood control and power benefits to the Willamette Valley.

This is the outlook conveyed by high government officials who have participated in the round of conferences that have been conducted the past month among administration executives on the federal budget that is now being compiled for submission to Congress in January.

Cougar and Hills Creek Dams are two of the three new hydroelectric projects for which Congress this past session appropriated initial construction funds. The third was Ice Harbor dam on the Snake River near Walla Walla, Wash.

"New Starts" President Eisenhower had not asked for an authorization of funds for Hills Creek or Ice Harbor, but Democratic members of Congress from both Oregon and Washington advocated "new starts" in both projects and succeeded in gaining approval of $1 million for Ice Harbor and $310,000 for Hills Creek.

The administration said it would ask Congress for funds to build Cougar dam, but only under the terms of a bill sponsored by Rep. Harris Ellsworth (R-Ore.) which called for "partnership" construction in a joint endeavor by Eugene Water and Electric Board and the Army Engineers. Ellsworth was unable to get action on his bill but told the House Appropriations Committee he favored funds for the dam whether it was built as a "partnership" project or entirely by the government. Congress appropriated $500,000 for Cougar.

Speculations have been making the rounds in recent weeks on whether the administration, in its desire to balance the budget next year, would enforce a cutback in federal spending by civilian agencies for non-military purposes. This raised the question of whether new river projects, which Congress in effect forced upon the administration with token appropriations, would be ignored in the new budget that goes to Congress in January.

From some Republican quarters, the new projects approved by Congress last session have been under heavy fire. Rep. John Taber (R-N.Y.), top GOP member of the House Appropriations Committee, claimed that completion of all the projects to be started with initial funds this year will eventually cost close to $2 billion.

But informed officials say confidently that the Eisenhower administration will not recommend a halt in construction of these projects in their early stages, but rather it is prepared to go through with them.

The Cougar project has an estimated total cost of $37,400,000, and Hills Creek $32,300,000. Ice Harbor is expected to cost $142,000,000.

Woman to Contest Will Giving Fund To UO Hospital

PORTLAND — Katie Hofen, daughter of Pauline Quaid, may attack the will of her mother, who died last month and left $150,000 to $175,000 for a psychiatric hospital at the University of Oregon Medical School.

Frank Sever, the woman's attorney, said Wednesday he was drafting papers to contest the will.

Mrs. Quaid, 97, left an estate valued by its attorney at about $205,000.

BRITISH FIGURE DIES NEW YORK — Hector McNeil, 48, formerly the No. 2 man in the British Labor government's Foreign Office, died Tuesday in a hospital.

LT. Gen. J.H. Atkinson, head of the Alaska Command, was to make the acceptance speech for the Army. Gov. B. Frank Heintzleman and other Alaska leaders were to participate.

Long Pipeline in Alaska Turned Over to Army

HAINES, Alaska — The 40 million dollar Haines-to-Fairbanks pipeline was being turned over formally to the U.S. Army in a ceremony here Wednesday.

The multi-purpose fuel line reaches across 626 miles of Alaska and Canada's Yukon Territory to feed the air bases of Alaska's interior. The line, with its three pumping stations to keep the fuel moving, already is in operation.
