Former Head Of Willamette Dies in Ohio

Dr. Carl Gregg Doney, long-time president of Willamette University who died at Columbus, O., Saturday, wavered between a law career and the ministry in his formative years.

It was not until he was graduated from Harvard and had practiced law briefly in Columbus that he charted his future course.

Dr. Doney attended preparatory school and college at Ohio State University. He first won BS and law degrees from that institution, then spent a year at Harvard. Honorary degrees came later, including a PhD from Harvard and a doctorate in divinity at Willamette. He also held an MA from Ohio Wesleyan.

He entered the Methodist ministry in 1893, shortly after marrying his childhood sweetheart, Jennie Evans, and held pastorates at Bainbridge, Granville, Delaware and Columbus, Ohio, and in Washington, D.C. He became president of West Virginia Wesleyan College in 1907, holding that post eight years until called to Willamette.

In 1918, he was sent to France to talk to American soldiers for several months. A serious illness led to his resignation from Willamette in 1924 but the resignation was refused, a year's leave of absence was granted, and Dr. Doney returned to be Willamette's president another decade until he reached the age of retirement.

Dr. Doney, a witty and entertaining speaker, was a life-long and outspoken foe of liquor, and opposed the introduction of dancing into Willamette's social life during his entire tenure in Salem. He encouraged the university's sports program but resisted efforts to make it a dominant factor in the university curriculum. He was a Mason, a Rotarian and the author of several books. Willamette's new dormitory is named for him and his wife.

The Doneyes had two children—Paul, a professor of English at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., who died in 1941, and Hugh, who is an executive of Quaker Oats in Chicago.

Traffic lights will begin operating some time this week at three busy points in the city's residential district, according to police.

The locations are High and Mission streets, 17th and State streets, and at 17th and Center streets. Increased traffic volume reportedly has made installation of the lights necessary. The lights will be the same type as those found at downtown intersections, police said.

Meanwhile, motorists have adjusted themselves to lights which began operating last week at five new downtown points along Church Street. The lights were installed at Church Street's intersections with State, Court, Chemeketa, Center and Marion Streets.
