Symphony Said Guided By Master

By STANLEY BUTLER
Assoc. Prof. of Music, Willamette University

The Portland Symphony Orchestra gave a magnificent concert last evening under the masterful leadership of its new conductor, Theodore Bloomfield. Bloomfield led his players through loving attention to details on an immensely satisfying projection of the entire program of the music.

The orchestra is already greatly improved over last year. The attacks were miraculously precise. No sputtering brass entrances here. The violins had a particularly opulent tone.

Conductor Bloomfield has solid concepts of musicianship. He follows a melody through from beginning to end, moulding it into persuasive shapes. His care for bridge passages in the music were as absorbing as the attention a gracious hostess gives to the externals of her party. In short, we heard a musician of taste.

Precision Noted
Furthermore, Bloomfield was able to easily impress his players with his intentions. The orchestra responded to his bidding with precision, whether the music called for a rigid beat or a comfortable flexibility.

The program was well chosen. How impressive was the Beethoven Overture! The Debussy Fetes were alive with rhythm. Immensely subtle, though clear to the sensitive listener, was the Suite from Der Rosenkavalier, by Strauss. The mighty first Symphony of Brahms brought the concert to an exultant close.

Less Players
It is a pleasure to record that one now doesn't need to be plagued by memories of orchestras from large cities. Oh no, the sound isn't ample, but let's not forget that those orchestras have at least 25 more players than the Portland Symphony. There were times when the woodwinds and the brass weren't heard as forcefully as one might wish.

This was an occasion when the audience might have loosened up and shouted for joy.

"As I said the other day," the President's message said, "while we continue willing to consider requests for arms needed for legitimate self-defense, we do not intend to contribute to an arms competition in the Near East."

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The United States Tuesday called for an early meeting of the U.N. Security Council to consider applications for U.N. membership from 18 countries, including controversial Outer Mongolia.

County Tax Money 'Flows' To Collector

Tax money, some of it in quarter-million dollar chunks, poured into the Marion County tax collector's office Tuesday ahead of the midnight discount deadline.

Mail, containing taxpayers' checks for the 1955-56 county property tax, was stacked high in the tax office and Chief Deputy Tax Collector Howard T. Evans said his office wouldn't be out from under the pile before the first of the year.

The county's two biggest property taxpayers—Portland General Electric and Pacific Telephone and Telegraph—waited along with hundreds of lesser taxpayers until the final hours to get their payments in. PGE, again the biggest single payer in the county, turned in a check for $237,028.73. PT&T's check was for $216,418.87.

As of 9 p.m. Tuesday night the tax office has processed 15,783 receipts covering some $2,537,350.25, which represents only about one-third of the county's record $7,177,252.05 tax for the year. But most of the remainder was represented in in-the-mail or in-the-drawer returns, Evans said.

Counting the PGE and PT&T accounts, Tuesday's tabulations totaled some $91,000. Except for those two, however, not too much came in over the counter. Deadline day lines were considerably shorter at the Courthouse than those of Monday.

Those missing Tuesday midnight deadline, not only lost the benefit of the three per cent discount, but face a penalty as well. Two-thirds of one per cent interest on first quarter taxes is in effect now on unpaid taxes.

$5 Million Camp Adair Work Confirms Long-Time Rumors

CORVALLIS — Plans of the U.S. Air Force to erect a $5,000,000 communications facility in the Camp Adair area, disclosed Tuesday, were hailed immediately as confirmation of long-time rumors that "something big is going on at Camp Adair."

For several years, rumors have coursed through the valley that Boeing Aircraft or some other industry would build a plant at Camp Adair.

A Corvallis newspaper reporter said that people here have heard so many rumors that their first reaction Tuesday was one of skepticism. This was quickly replaced by a feeling that the new facility may create a housing shortage here.

Housing already is reported as "tight" in this state college city. Some to Be Married

The Air Force said that a number of those stationed at the communications center will be married. It was presumed that many would want to live "off the post."

Monmouth and Albany are other nearby cities that personnel of the new center might look to for housing. Salem is approximately 25 miles from Camp Adair.

An Air Force spokesman declined to enlarge on a statement that the new facility would have "several hundred" personnel.

Dates Back
Camp Adair dates back to World War II when the government acquired some 55,000 acres of land for the military cantonment. Used as an Army training ground, four infantry divisions were activated there.

They were the 70th "Trailblazer" Division, the 91st "Powder River" Division, the 96th "Dead-eye" Division and the 104th "Timberwolves" outfit.

At its height of activity, Camp Adair had a military population of some 40,000.

Post War Period
In the post-war period, most of the land has been sold back to farmers. Today only 400 acres remain under federal government ownership. The National Guard is using part of this area. About a dozen industries, mostly small ones, are using some of the rest.

Adair Village, a familiar landmark to tourists on Highway 99W, was used to house married veterans attending Oregon State College after the war. Finally, these buildings, too, were sold to the public and were moved.

The Air Force said the communications center probably would be built northeast of the Adair Village site.

One of the next steps will be to sell approximately 20 buildings that are to be moved. Consisting of barracks and garage-type buildings, they were used by prisoners of war when Camp Adair was active.

Sale of the buildings is contemplated within a month, the Air Force reported.

Col. Etter said the new communications center would utilize "a relatively small portion" of Camp Adair's remaining 400 acres. He said he "presumed" that the government would sell the remaining portion of Camp Adair.
