New Conservative Journal

On a New York newstand last week we picked up a copy of the new weekly, "National Review." It is launched boldly as a magazine with a conservative outlook. Already the field for liberal magazines is preempted with such publications as The Nation and New Republic.

Listed in the stable, which looks like a carbon from The Freeman, a magazine of similar import, are names of those already prominent in the colony of right wing writers: John Chamberlain, William Henry Chamberlin, Max Eastman, Eugene Lyons, Clarence Manion, J. B. Matthews, John Dos Passos, Freda Ulye.

Well, we read the issue of National Review and found it quite sterile. We admit to having grown weary in reading the continuous gripes of The Nation. We fear the new conservative magazine will prove equally boring.

Political 'Regency' Around Eisenhower Laying Plans to Control GOP Convention

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—Who compose the political regency? President Eisenhower was never very politically inclined anyway, and now he is further insulated from politics by his illness.

But these men are "they". Their relationship, no doubt, is not quite so well defined now as it was during the ten months before the President's election and inauguration.

The original members were Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York, Herbert Brownell and Thomas E. Stephens, who represented New York's huge convention delegation plus the skill that had twice won Dewey the Republican nomination.

The positions of almost all these men have altered since 1952. Dewey, for instance, is no longer Governor, although he still controls the great bulk of the New York delegates.

But these men are "they". Their relationship, no doubt, is not quite so well defined now as it was during the ten months before the President's election and inauguration.

All the same, the old Commodore group has now been informally re-constituted, with the changes above-indicated; and if anyone is now in charge of White House politics, then they are in charge.

Moreover, Sen. Knowland and the other Republicans who do not like the idea of the President choosing his successor if he decides not to run himself, are altogether right about what "they" are planning.

The task is made easier, very obviously, by deferring the announcement of the President's intentions. All sorts of Republican hopes though that the strong leaders of Georgia will rally behind Senator George and carry him through to triumph.

Eden Changes His Cabinet

Now Sir Anthony Eden has his own team in the governing cabinet of Britain. He shuffled seats this week to give him the personnel he wants in key offices.

The moves should strengthen the Eden ministry. Butler has developed as an effective parliamentarian which is quite necessary under the British system of cabinet responsibility to Parliament.

Editorial Comment

SAOLE

Is it too obvious a comment to say that people don't take Register-Guard recipes with a grain of salt?

Now, wondered housewives here, there and everywhere, what the Sam Hill is saole? They called the paper, some of them, and learned that saole was one of those gremlin-invented products that sometimes roll out of linotype machines.

Some didn't call the paper. One called the Northwest Grocery Co., figuring that if saole were food, that was the place to learn more about it.

Nor is it a Scandinavian greeting—pronounced "Say, Ole."

continental types of association. The former is quite loose—the Commonwealth is a good example of its type.

The conclusion offered by Dr. Shotwell was this: while organic union of nations is making little progress, the countries of Western Europe are developing what might be called functional co-operation.

Second, he referred to the Steel and Coal community. Originally a French inspiration (the Schuman plan) it developed into a well-knit organization for the pooling of resources and manufacture in the heavy industries of Western Europe.

The third is the Council of Europe, the consultative body which meets regularly at Strasbourg. This body is not a law-making body, but one where representatives of the member powers meet to discuss common problems.

To illustrate the practical success of the Council, Dr. Shotwell referred to the decision made some months ago by Britain to station four divisions permanently on the continent as its contribution to the Western Defense Community.

Along this same line one may note another victory in the Council of Europe. Sweden, as is known, refused to join NATO though its Scandinavian associates, Norway and Denmark did.

Second, German reunification is necessary, on the basis of free elections.

Third, any new security arrangement for Europe with the USSR which does not include this reunification will be inadequate and dangerous.

This is of course the foundation of western policy toward Germany and Russia.

Man Slain by Former Wife At Creswell

EUGENE — Months of domestic arguments were climaxed when Clarence Lewis Hamilton, 26, Klamath Falls, was shot to death Tuesday night as he forced his way through the barricaded door at his divorced wife's house at Creswell, south of here.

Dist. Atty. Eugene Venn quoted Hamilton's former wife, Aileen Belle Hamilton, 31, as saying she fired twice at him in self defense.

According to Mrs. Hamilton her ex-husband had broken into her home several times.

It was reported at Klamath Falls that Hamilton was shot in the hip by Mrs. Hamilton in January, 1954, when he tried to force his way into her apartment.
