Making McKay a Target

Columnist Marquis Childs had a piece the other day saying that the Democrats are making Secretaries Benson and McKay their prime targets. Instead of aiming their arrows at Eisenhower, they fire them at men in his cabinet, particularly these two. Benson is attacked because he hasn't maintained the incomes of farmers. Doug McKay is under a drumfire of criticism for alleged "giveaway." First, it was the administration approval of grant of title to certain offshore lands to the states. That had been approved by Eisenhower before he became President, but Interior and McKay got the blame because former Secretary Ickes had raised the issue which led to the Supreme Court finding that the federal interest was "paramount."

Then McKay was attacked because of the partnership power policy of the administration, with the Hells Canyon project, which Interior dropped, as the main talking point. In 1954 the patenting of the Al Serena mining claims in Southern Oregon was similarly charged to McKay as a "giveaway." This is now the subject of a congressional investigation which is surcharged with politics. Latest action of Interior, that opening certain wild life refuges to oil prospecting, has drawn . the crossfire of conservation groups. Secretary McKay defends this order as one which resulted from two years of thorough study of the problems relative to leasing on such areas, and states that the regulations assure maximum protection to wild life refuges.

With all this black paint daubed in, McKay's portrait becomes one quite unfamiliar to his long-time friends and associates. They retain full confidence in his integrity. We can't help but doubt though, if Doug realized the hornet's nest he was getting into when he took this job in Washington. Interior is one of the departments where the contention is greatest because it deals with valuable resources. The job of the Interior secretary is to conserve and protect the national interest in these resources, but that should not mean to put them in a perpetual deep freeze. Maybe Doug didn't put on enough armor when he stepped into the place formerly held by the old curmudgeon, Harold

News Suppression on Coos Bay

A shooting took place down at Empire in Coos county on Thursday. When the reporter for the Coos Bay Times went to the North Bend police station to get the news story, he was denied access to the public booking sheet. Instead he was handed a form on which to make a written request for "the following public information" and then there was a blank to fill out: "Purpose for which this information is to be used." The reporter spurned the form and again sought the booking sheet, without success. The Times in its issue that night reported the "North Bend police, the State Police, the district attorney's office and other interested agencies refused to reveal anything about the violent incident and carefully kept secret all entries on public records regarding the case." Finally the reporter did dig up information to the effect that one man was charged in justice court with assault with intent to kill and the name of the assailant and his victim.

Here certainly is a glaring case of news suppression which must be promptly cor-

Southern Alameda Goes Modern

A few days ago residents of southern Alameda county, California, voted to form a new city to be named Fremont after the explorerarmy officer who figured in the early history of California. The unique thing about it is that its area of 96 square miles makes it the third largest in land size of all the cities of the state. Los Angeles has 450.9 sq. mi., San Diego 99.4, but Oakland has only 53 sq. mi., and San Francisco on the tip of the peninsula with the same name, only 44.6 sq. mi.

One's instinct is to laugh at the pretensions of Fremont. But as the San Francisco Chronicle explains the move, it really makes sense. The new city is really the consolidation of five towns in the district between Oakland and San Jose, Here is the Chronicle's explanation:

"Growth forced the five-town merger-the increasing pressure of subdivisions, with their need for schools, lighting, and utilities. Rather than see their surroundings grow up haphazard, without proper zoning controls. without planned park and recreation areas or school sites, the people of Washington Township wisely decided to reach out for the advantages of a unified, self-governing com munity under the city manager system. They have an opportunity, which we hope they'll seize, of planning Fremont for the needs of tomorrow, rather than letting its devolpment follow the cowpaths of yesteryear."

That makes sense. Elsewhere urbanized communities are struggling with the problems of political boundary lines. Proposals are made for easier means to extend city limits or for creation of a new urban unit, the metropolitan area. These California towns just went modern overnight. Without doubt they will have many growing pains, but at least they are spared the usual city-ruralsuburban complication.

Salem and West Salem showed the same good sense in uniting a few years ago. Many other cities though, are strangled by their own boundary lines.

Another reason why crops pile up unused is the increase in world production. The Department of Agriculture reports that in every major geographical area the 1955-56 production is exceeding that of 1954-55, except for a very few commodities. The estimate is 119 per cent of the 1935-39 average. Of course world population has increased, too, but not enough to consume all the produce at market prices acceptable to producers.

The McMinnville News-Register carries news from "High Heaven." Is that the place we all yell to?

APOLOGIES TO BALDOCK

At one time, in a discussion of highways with state highway engineer Sam Baldock, we accused him of throwing away money if he spent much on a new road from Corvallis to Albany.

Well, Mr. Baldock, we apologize. The new Wilsonville cutoff is a honey and more and more people from Corvallis are now going to Portland on this route. We don't know what would be the reaction if you spent the same amount of money fixing up 98-W as you eventually plan to use on the Corvallis-Albany, but certainly as of now going to Portland via Albany is the best route for Corvallis people. -- Corvallis Gazette-Times.
