Solons to Review Trend Of U.S. Military Spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House appropriations subcommittee called Monday for a "new look at the Defense Department's 'new look' program."

In a statement on the eve of closed hearings on the department's new budget, Chairman Mahon (D-Tex.) said he was "disturbed about the over-all direction of the entire defense program."

Mahon said his 15-man subcommittee probably will spend the next three months on the program, starting with testimony Tuesday and Wednesday from Secretary of Defense Wilson.

Mahon said he believed the budget "could and would be reduced by the committee, but we certainly shall not make any reductions which would dull the fighting edge of our military force."

He expressed concern over the Defense Department's request for 800 fewer aircraft for the Air Force next year than Congress approved this year.

"Congress and the country are entitled to be reasonably sure whether our $5 billion dollar annual defense spending means we are buying a defense program patterned after realistic requirements," he said.

"Are we keeping ahead of the Soviets? Are we placing the emphasis in the right direction? If Russia is leading in the missile field, it certainly is not the place where we can afford to play second fiddle if we are to make the greatest possible contribution toward the objective of deterring Soviet aggression."
