Faith Healer Wins Florida Legal Battle

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Charges that "Faith Healer" Jack Coe practiced medicine illegally were dismissed Monday by Peace Justice Hugh F. Duval.
 Duval said he did not approve or condone Coe's action in telling the parents of a 3-year-old polio victim to remove the child's braces.

"But by the same token, this court does not condemn the defendant or anyone who in good faith advocates and practices divine healing," Duval added.
 Mr. and Mrs. Gorge Clark brought the charges against the Texas evangelist, asserting that their son, George Jr., suffered a setback when they took off his braces on Coe's instructions.
 Coe's $5,000 bond will be returned to him and he will be free to continue his services here.

Question of Medicine
 "The basic issue in this case," Duval said, "is whether the acts and words of the defendant came within the exception in the law governing the practice of medicine."
 Testimony varied as to what the defendant actually did and said. It is fair to conclude from the testimony that the defendant said in effect: "The child is healed; leave the braces off and have the child walk a little each day for a few days."
 "Considering these words alone, it would appear that they went beyond the realm of the spirit and entered the realm of physical therapy."

Divine Intervention
 "However, these words must be considered along with the actions and words of the defendant in the entire service. All testimony showed that the defendant professed his healing powers to come only through divine intervention."
 "The doctrine of divine healing clearly comes within the exception to the statute."
 "As evidence by the letters of Mrs. Clark, the parents were looking to God and faith to cure their child. It appears to the court that the defendant acted unwisely in making the remark he made. Great harm might have resulted to the child; fortunately, it did not."

Russia Vetoes Siberian Coast Jaunt by Flier
 FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Roland A. Jalbert had figured he might fly along the Siberian coast on a trip to India in his single engine plane. He is changing his plans after getting a one-sentence reply from the Soviet embassy in Washington.
 The letter to the assistant professor of physics at the University of Alaska from an embassy official said curtly:
 "In reply to your letter of January 24, we would like to inform you at the present time the trip, as it is planned by you, cannot be arranged."
 Jalbert has started figuring a new route.

Pearson Libel Suit Pressure To Continue

PORTLAND (AP) — Lew Wallace, Portland politician and insurance man, plans to continue prosecution of his $250,000 libel suit against radio commentator Drew Pearson.
 The suit is an outgrowth of Pearson's remarks concerning the Al Sarena mining claims case. Wallace contends that Pearson implied that Wallace attempted to influence the Department of Interior decision in the case.
 Pearson discussed the matter in his Sunday broadcast. Wallace said that if the broadcast was intended as an explanation or an apology, it failed. He said the broadcast only further misrepresented him.

its allies have the capability, if they have the will, of producing ground forces able to counter the Communist land forces."
 Taylor and Brucker testified behind closed doors but a synopsis of what they said was released by the committee.
 Both stressed the importance of the army in event of any war while conceding that America's power to discourage aggression rests also on the air force and navy. As Taylor put it this way: "Every effort must be made to develop this visible strength in being which will convince any potential enemy that aggression directed at the free world will fail."
 "This strength must be real and tangible—and must be tri-dimensional—on the ground in the air and on the sea. There can be no chinks in the armor of deterrence."
 Taylor and Brucker laid emphasis on developing new weapons, saying that the army must use a wide range of robot missiles to carry out its primary mission. Brucker said:
 "These missiles, in the final analysis, are artillery projectiles having extended range accuracy and lethality."
