

County Zoning Backed by Family Group

(Also see story page 1)
Zoning for Marion County was recommended by the Family and Community Living Committee, one of 13 committees reporting Monday at the Marion County Farm and Home Outlook Conference held at Randall's Chuck Wagon.

Mrs. Norman Reiling headed this committee which reported that zoning would help provide coordinated stable growth of the community, and assist in making best use of land resources.

In recommending that several groups of young homemakers be organized on an experimental program to more "fully analyze the needs and interests of the women," the committee pointed out that in Marion County there were 24,408 married women over 14 years of age.

Farm Types Decrease
The number of part-time and residential farms is now decreasing while suburban population is going up, the Suburban Living Committee reported. This, the committee members said, indicated that part-time farming ventures have proven unprofitable and that the land is worth more now as building sites.

The dairy and poultry reports paralleled each other in the recommendation for larger units to make these industries profitable. Both committees also stressed that their types of business were not for "in-and-outers," because of the initial cost of entry. Cornelius Bateson, Salem, mentioned that the chicken broiler industry was "good over a five year period."

Speaking on dairying, James Phillips, Silverton, warned the man contemplating entering the dairying business to "first examine yourself to see if you are cut out to be a dairyman, because you'll be in it a long while if you are going to succeed."

Production Aim
Frank Graisinger, also talking on dairying, suggested that production rather than higher butterfat content should be the aim to meet the modern demands.

The soil and water resources committee reviewed irrigation and drainage as related to soil and water utilization. It referred to The Marion County underground water supply as "not inexhaustible," and urged landowners to view the small watershed sites in their own communities.

That there are easier ways to farm than by producing livestock was the conclusion of the Livestock Committee headed by Adam Hensch. The committee recommended that "families seeking large, quick incomes with low labor requirements should shop in other fields than livestock."

The Vegetable Committee believed that the fresh vegetable market of the Northwest area had been neglected by Marion County growers. Committee members urged placing more emphasis on quality, "keep a constant lookout for new crops, as well as for new processing methods, packaging and preserving techniques."

Principal Problem
One of the principal problems of farm labor, according to the report of the Farm Labor Committee, was a closer study in proper routing of out-of-state labor for continuous work. Growers should assist in directing help to channels close by, to helping labor keep busy, Floyd Bates, Salem, spokesman said.

Hunger Lack Said Secret U.S. Weapon

The "secret weapon" of America is "absence of hunger," Salem Chamber of Commerce members were told Monday by a representative of American Can Co.

Oregon food industries, for instance, used more tin cans than did all of Russia, although area and population is only about one per cent of Russia's, J. Roger Deas said at the noon meeting in Marion Hotel.

Deas, former assistant to Chief Justice Earl Warren and college speech professor, is employed as a speaker by the company now planning a can factory in North Salem. He has another connection with Salem in that his wife, the former Frances Marian Marshall, lived here for several years as a child and attended schools here.

Following an introduction by Robert Paulus, president of Paulus Brothers Packing Co., Deas introduced himself as "American Can Company's answer to the gas shortage."

His inspirational talk was based on President McKinley's prediction in 1900 that the 20th century would be one of "selling and telling the American way" through the words of the wise and the deeds of all.

He was accompanied by Ed Gross, American Can Co. district sales manager, and R. K. Fredericks, plant manager, both of Portland.

Top Salem high school speakers and their instructors were guests at the lunch.

Vets Receiving Benefits From Loan Plan

Veterans who have applied for mortgage cancellation insurance on their state farm and home loans began receiving their insurance certificates Monday.

The state department of veterans' affairs said it is mailing 7,400 certificates, which includes 80 per cent of the veterans who have loans. The insurance becomes effective March 1.

Borrowers who haven't applied yet have until May 1 to do so without proving insurability. The insurance costs 28 cents a month per $1,000 of insurance on the unpaid balance of the mortgage. The insurance, written by Standard Insurance Co., Portland, doesn't increase the veterans' monthly payments. The insurance cost is paid by adding a few more months to the repayment period.

Forms Due for State Units' Budget Needs

The state budget department announced Monday it has ordered forms for use of various state departments and institutions in preparing their budgets for the next biennium and would begin actual preparation of the budget prior to July 1.

The budget when approved by the governor will be sent to the 1957 legislature which will report out appropriate bills. First step in preparing the budget is conferring with the heads of state activities regarding their requests.

The general fund budget approved by the 1955 legislature for the current viennium aggregated $221,897,225.

Budget department officials predicted that the general fund budget for the next biennium would be as large or larger than that for the current two-year period.
