

Malenkov Sees British A-Plant, Newsmen Wait

By EDDY GILMORE
LONDON (AP)—Britain opened her top atomic energy research plant to former Soviet Premier Georgi Malenkov Monday. But it made American correspondents and other newsmen wait outside. "You will be allowed to see Dido, the heavy water pile, but you can see nothing else," a British official told newsmen at the Harwell plant. "We are sorry, but security rules are security rules."

Kim Billaev, correspondent for the Soviet News Agency Tass, laughed in the official's face. "You amaze me," he said. "You let all these Russian scientists in. Do you think they understand less about atomic secrets than American correspondents?"

80-Mile Ride
Malenkov, now Soviet minister for power stations, got up early to make the 80-mile ride from London to Harwell.

He was joined here by other members of the visiting Soviet delegation. They had spent the night at Windsor after sightseeing in the town steeped in royal traditions.

Malenkov and his party were ushered through the entire plant at Harwell. British officials gave no indication what was hidden—if anything—from the Russians.

Two Bodyguards
Malenkov and his aides hurriedly scribbled notes as Sir John Cockcroft, Britain's atomic energy director, guided them through the plant. Malenkov's two personal bodyguards went with him.

The Russians began their inspection by looking over "Beto," the first large atomic pile ever built in Britain. Then they looked over the isotope works which includes radioactive material.

Going into one laboratory, Malenkov donned a special protective white suit and shoes.

Wait Outside
While the Russians were making their tour, the correspondents waiting outside included three American reporters, the Tass man and 15 British newsmen and photographers.

Malenkov maintained the same genial manner he has shown since his arrival in Britain last Thursday for a three-week tour, devoted mainly to inspecting power stations.

After lunch at Harwell, the former premier was to meet Prime Minister Eden.

"Well, anyway, this man is brighter since she switched to Mrs. Stewart's Bluing."

San Francisco Newspaper Plans $1 Million Press

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The San Francisco Chronicle said Monday it was spending a million dollars for a new press.

Hoe Co. in New York is building the press which the Chronicle said would increase its flexibility in the use of color and provide sharper pictures and faster production.

It will take almost a year to build, assemble and install the new press.
