State Juvenile Meeting To Draw 125 Persons

An estimated 125 persons from across Oregon will attend the Oregon Juvenile Council's annual spring conference Thursday at MacLaren School for Boys at Woodburn.

A general morning session will open the conference with council president Dr. James Ashbaugh presiding. This will be followed by several hours of business meetings and panel discussions.

William G. Long, juvenile judge from Seattle will be guest speaker at a conference luncheon.

Subjects to be reported on at the business meeting include legislation, public relations and studies on the problems of suspended commitments and the handling of runaway children. A panel discussion on the resources of the community will be participated in by five prominent social workers, and moderated by Judy Keller, South Salem High School senior.

The five panel members are Andrew Juras, state child welfare director; Dr. Richard Wilcox, state director of local health services; Mickey Pease, executive director of Portland's Pal Boys' Club; Glen L. Weaver, state occupational information and guidance service

SAFE DRIVING BROADENS
NEW YORK — Forty per cent of the country's high schools now offer some kind of instruction in safe automobile driving. Columbia University's teachers college record says it is the fastest-growing program in the educational field.
