By DON HARGER

Our Diamond Lake spy was a nit confused on his last report from that southern Oregon lake. According to late reports from several anglers who trolled miles of water down there, the fishing was practically a dry run. Then we turn right around and lend ear to a couple of fly ishermen who reported that although the trollers had no luck, they had little trouble in taking fish. They used a white fly to do the job. So-the lishing is either bad or good at Diamond lake. Take your choice . . . Just about the same story comes from anglers who have fished Wickiup reservoir this season. If the trolling gets monotonous they turn to fly fishing, and catch fish. Looks as if the anglers will have to go armed with two or three rods and enough gear to try all methods The best example of how fast conditions can change on angling comes from Newport We talked with Emory Lebold on Saturday evening and learned that the fishing was absolutely nil. No herring in the bay. No salmon in the bay No nothing First thing we heard on Monday morning was just how good the fishing was at Newport on Sunday. Numerous salmon were taken, with chinook running close to 30 lbs

All We Need is Opportunity to Catch 'Em

Later in the week other reports trickled in from Newport which makes us believe that the salmon are there and only the weather is holding the anglers down. Quite a few fish were taken between the bar and the black buoy. Numerous small silvers were also reported along with the larger chinook. With a lull in the daily winds, anglers will be able to get over the bar and make the best of the fishing. The fish are evidently there. All we need is the opportunity to fish for them. Spring run chinook are still knocking lures silly in the North Santiam near Stayton. Early morning and late afternoon finds anglers having a regular field day on the big springers. However, ore of the fish are lost than are landed and it all adds up to of fun. Red and white wobblers seem to be best producers and they should be fished fairly deep. Lots of lures are left on the rocks and many are left in the fish. The fun of large fish on light tackle more than compensates for the loss of lures.

June 30 marks the close of the salmon season on the Santiam, so there is little time left to try your hand at the big salmon. So long as the trout fishing remains at the poor mark we can be happy that we have the salmon in the river to take

Might Try for Some Shad, and Some Fun

A few shad are reported in the lower Willamette and in the Sandy. Although the runs are not large as yet there are a few anglers going after the "poor man's salmon" and they are having

A successful fly this year has been a fly called the red-head, It is little more than a modification of the eastern shad flies used successfully on the east coast. A very sparsely dressed fly with a silver tinsel body and yellow bucktail wing is about all that is needed. A fluorescent red bead is slipped on the leader so that it rests at the head end of the fly. This added trick. It is a lot easier than trying to fashion a large head

Your shad will run from 3 to 5 lbs and will put a whale of a crap on light tackle. To take up the dull periods while you are waiting for trouting conditions to improve, you might try your 10. Cal K., L. Dales
