She's Prepared for Old Age

LOS ANGELES—Dr. Maria Schnee Haynes, an Austrian-born matron who made a three-year study of growing old as she worked for her Ph.D. at UCLA, joins her six-year-old son, Charles, in playing with a medieval castle at their home here. Dr. Haynes, who has evolved a group of suggestions on how-to-be-happy, while-growing-old, says adults should maintain a lively interest in things going on around them, including children's toys. (AP Wirephoto.)

Then there was the mention in Drake's log of a sand bar across the mouth of the inlet. None exists now. But the Coast Guard and Army Engineers reported Drake's "plate of brasse" was found on the inner shore of San Francisco Bay. Someone who had brought it here, then thrown it thinking it was junk.

But the discovery threw wide open the question of just where the famed British explorer had made his landing.

announcement at a meeting held, appropriately enough, at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel.

A guest, A. A. Curming, curator of the Drake Museum at Buckland Abbey, Plymouth, England, praised the "care and thoroughness" of the research.

For years it had been assumed that Drake landed north of here, chiefly because old records listed Drake' Bay and Drake's Estero. Then why was the brass plate found miles away? Drake had put it up on a post to claim "Nova Albion" for Queen Elizabeth I, while he and his men repaired his ship, the Golden Hind, and are always to the National Committee.
