

'Eat More Turkey' Week Opens Today

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman
Today is the day you start eating turkey to help keep Oregon's $8,000,000 turkey industry an $8,000,000 business. "Eat More Turkey" week opens today and will run through to Aug. 4. Prices of turkey hens are not too attractive to the growers now—running about 34 cents—in consequence a lot of growers are putting them on ice until fall when prices are expected to advance.

However, the Oregon Turkey Growers Association promises that there will be plenty available on the market during the Eat-More week.
Processing Cost
Added to the price to the grower will be an 8-cent processing cost per pound as well as the cost which the retailer must have—bringing turkeys from 45 to 49 cents a pound to the consumer. Small hens from four to eight pounds, will be most plentiful at a reasonable cost. With the cost of feed and the price of the hens, some growers said that they do not feel like putting more costly feed into them so as to dispose of them. Also there are a number of fryer-roasters in the form of Beltville Whites, now available at really good buys to the consumer, according to Lloyd Churches, chairman of the Eat More Turkey Week for Marion County. The Eat-More week is sponsored by the Oregon Turkey Improvement Association, reports Churches.

Young Tom Shortage
There is a definite shortage of young toms, particularly the heavy young toms which are sought by hotels and restaurants. These are bringing from 14 to 16 cents more to the grower than the turkey hens.
The lighter weight toms, such as the 12 to 16 pounders, are selling now for about the same as hens, according to Churches.

The turkey promotion week includes Turkey Night at Waters Field Friday. Quite a few turkeys will be given away then and a turkey dog demonstration will be featured. There will be also novelty turkey displays in some of the Salem stores, and local restaurants are being urged. Churches reports to have turkey, either hot or cold or both, on their menus each day from today to August 4.

County to Be Test Site in Farm Tax Plan

Plans to use Marion County as a "test county" in developing a more equitable method of determining farm valuations for tax purposes was announced this week by the State Tax Commission and State Board of Higher Education. The project involves a $10,000 contract signed with Oregon State College in which OSEC farm soil experts will work with the tax commission reclassifying all Marion County farms. Costs will be shared equally by the two organizations.
If the re-evaluation project is successful, it will probably be extended to other counties later, Samuel Stewart, tax commission chairman, said.

Plans are to develop soil maps and classification units through a study of soil, climatic conditions and types of crops grown in Marion County. This will be combined with estimated figures on the net annual income per acre on individual farms, to help determine tax assessment rates.
In the past tax commissioners based their farm valuation findings on such things as distance of farms from markets and soil types, with little emphasis on farm productivity.

Stewart said Marion County was chosen for the experiment for two principal reasons, the diversity of crops raised on its farms, and the property re-appraisal program that is already under way in the county.
