Clothes for Holidays Shown in Style Previews

By CELE WOHL FLORENCE, Italy — Skin tight coveralls and leg hugging pants were the unanimous after-ski or after-swim choice of minor Italian designers in fall style previews here last night. Six boutiques led by knitwear expert Mirsa of Milan, presented carefree collections of holiday clothes. Mirsa's colorful sweaters were knitted right down into white pleated skirts, making unusual one-piece dresses. Her V-necked tennis sweaters made a hit, as did heavy hooded tabblestitched sweaters and Jersey knit pants. Avolo, pessimistic about the coming season, showed a long line of raincoats, lined to match rain-bow dresses. His best effort was a white raincoat with a black velvet collar, worn over a kind of black union suit. Party Clothes Shown Bertoli's collection was strictly for indoors. His let's-have-a-party dresses gleamed with silver and gold embroidery. Un-wintery pastels were effective with flower gardens of sequins. Luisa Spagnoli, widely known sweater maker, branched into a full wardrobe of ready made low cost clothes. She astonished the audience by announcing prices as the models were presented — an unheard of practice. The price tags ranged down to $15.
