United Fund Pledges Trail Figure for 1955

A comparison of first-week pledges to Salem's United Fund to last year's shows $44,678 less collected. Thursday's total was $75,699 compared to $120,377 one year ago.

Several reasons for the difference were offered Thursday at the noon luncheon of campaign workers. One was by Otto Wilson, a veteran campaigner who said the situation was not unusual, but that it did call for a reevaluation of the plan of procedure.

Elmer Berglund, one of the campaign leaders, said that success of the campaign depends largely on chapter chairmen and that the chapter plan was "the heart of the campaign."

Kenneth Potts, a former campaign chairman, said that the organization had a good machine but that it apparently was slow in gaining momentum.

Mrs. E. W. Rector, leader of the women's division, urged all her workers to complete their solicitations as quickly as possible.

So far only 3 per cent of quota has been raised from suburban residents and 18 per cent from city residents.

Another division which could account for the small showing to date, said C. A. Kells, executive secretary, was state employees which so far have only pledged 10 per cent of a $28,130 quota.

Three divisions are now passed the 50 per cent mark. Utilities, 86 per cent, general gifts, 53 per cent, and contractors 31 per cent. Federal employees are two percentage points behind the half-way mark.

Mercantile division is the leader in cash breakdown with $17,373. Board president Herbert E. Barker, told United Fund workers Thursday that he was informed that some Salem firms still haven't been contacted and asked that the situation be corrected quickly.

Next report luncheon will be Monday noon at the Hotel Marion.

Conference in Salem on Klamath Indian Problems Airs Sharp Split in Opinions

By RUSSELL BIERAUGEL
Staff Writer, The Statesman
Conflicting opinions on the course to follow in easing Klamath Indians into full U.S. citizenship were aired vigorously Thursday at Willamette University with little of agreement. The tribe itself is split into two major camps. Selden Kirk, chairman of the Klamath Tribe council, was major spokesman for those who want to keep the tribe and the reservation near Klamath Falls intact.

Wayne Crawford, also a council member, was equally determined that the right of members to withdraw from the tribe and cash in their share of reservation property, as provided in the law ending federal trusteeship, be preserved.

Each side claims a majority of the 2,000 members. Interruptions were frequent as the opposing faction threw conflicting statistics at each other in the invitational conference sponsored by Oregon Council of Churches as an effort to understand the law and compile suggestions to aid the Indians in their adjustment.

The 240 persons attending the all-day meeting were separated into eight groups in the last session to work out suggestions. A large measure of agreement was reached on proposals to preserve the reservation's timber resources; respect as much as possible the feelings of the Indians; provide eventual self-determination and full citizenship; and amend the present law to extend government trusteeship beyond the present August, 1958, cutoff date.

Side Issues
While threading through frequent side issues, the discussion kept returning to the argument between the Indians who want to keep the reservation intact and those who want the privilege of selling out. Although all special Indian relationships with the federal government are being closed out, the 1954 law affecting the Klamath Tribe is believed to be the only one which provides sale of a proportionate share of reservation land for each member who chooses to withdraw from the tribe.

A high emotional point was reached when the gray-haired, crew cut tribe council chairman, eyes blazing, but voice slow and firm, challenged the audience: "Why didn't they turn the reservation over to the Indians? Have the Indians been people all this time? Have they ever let him use his initiative?"

Market Drop
Objectors to selling a portion of the 600,000 acres of ponderosa pine to private bidders to pay members who elect to withdraw from the tribe say it would depress prices by flooding the market and ruin timberland that should be cut on a sustained yield basis.

E. G. Favelle of Lakeview, member of the three-man board of management specialists appointed by Douglas McKay when he was secretary of interior to plan the change-over, said the group is recommending that the government buy the land that would be withdrawn, estimated at 70 per cent, to insure continuance of the sustained yield practice.

They estimated appraised value would be about $80 million.

Steps Taken To Organize Aging Council

Preliminary steps looking toward formation of a permanent Oregon council on aging were taken Thursday by Gov. Elmo Smith.

The governor named five persons on a committee he has asked to make specific recommendations to him on organization, responsibilities, functions and membership of a statewide council on aging.

Members of the committee are Dr. Ernest Jaqua, Dr. Adolph Weinzirl and Mrs. C. E. Zollinger, all of Portland; Dr. Harold Erickson, state health officer, and C. F. Feike, state director of vocational rehabilitation.

Gov. Smith, after several conferences in recent months on the problems concerning elderly persons, expressed the opinion that many of these problems revolve around employment, housing, education, recreation, health and rehabilitation as well as financial security.

Counties Get Public Land Sale Money

Sales of public land in Oregon by the federal government returned a total of $35,327 to the State of Oregon during the year ended last June 30, Secretary of State Earl T. Newby reported Thursday.

This money, distributed to the counties on the basis of area, represents five per cent of the net proceeds of sales of public lands and materials within the state, and is for the benefit of public roads and bridges.

Seven State Employees Win $150 in Suggestion System

Seven state employees received a total of $150 from the State Employee Suggestion Awards Board at a meeting Thursday in the Statehouse. Three other persons were awarded certificates of merit.

Top cash awards of $30 each went to Alice E. Bauman, an employee of the State Industrial Accident Commission, and Cyrus P. Younger, an employee of Fairview Home.

Miss Bauman suggested a new form for all transfers due to a change in the system of processing employers' monthly payroll and contribution reports.

Younger suggested a change in the routing of draft air while employees are working in steam boilers.

Receiving $25 was F. Arlene Torresal, also an employee of the State Industrial Accident Commission. She suggested that charges for crutches and canes be assessed against the claim as part of the treatment instead of charging the claimant separately.

Jane Perman, State Tuberculosis Hospital, also won $25 for her suggestion recommending the use of a printed laundry list in all wards.

Ruth E. Steger, State Tax Commission, was awarded $30 and Dorothy Strawn, Industrial Accident Commission, $10. Also receiving $10 was Mrs. Ruth Beam, Public Utilities Commission.
