when he opened the monologue just doesn't go when the season with it's done on television. For one the season with his new format. If, indeed, this is a format in the first place.

Because networks have a habit of "bolstering" opening "opening" opening "opening" opening shows with high-powered guest stars, Shriner worked under the double handicap of having to Irade quips with Red Shrings to Irade quips with Red Sh his element and knew it. He finally wound up "conducting" a large orchestra in a composition of his composit own. He played it straight, and become established in her chosen Gale Lowell Fox own. He played it straight, and so did the musicians. I suspect they were actually following the drummer, not Gleason.

It is invariably a mistage of outsized proportions to ask one comic to work with another. Gleason and Shriner are about as compatible, professionally speaking, as off and water. Each looked as off and circus gets to be an actress gets to be actress ge patible, professionally speaking, as oil and water. Each looked as though he liked the other but did not know what on earth to do with him. The writers were in the same boat.

With his helping hands finally know her own mind well enough to the way. Shriner launched into the first of his innovations, a series of home movies he allegedly took himself. They were, of course, gag shots from start is false. Think it over.

I rather suspect he's right. An 4. A.F. & A.M.

to finish and highly reminiscent of the old Mack Sennett cornedy days. Shriner does the commentary. It wasn't terribly funny.

The day is lonk since gone, I think, when a comedian can just stand up on a stage and deliver a monologue. It was great in the old days when a Will Regers could drawl his way through an act at McCarey himself will serve as preold days when a Will Rogers could drawl his way through an act at the Palace, and is still great today when a Danny Thomas can stay when a Danny Thomas can stay of the "Good Sam" series and may also direct it. But Gregory Peck won't be starring in it.
