

95 in Italy Rescued From Mad Brothers

(Story also on page one.)
TERRAZZANO, Italy, Oct. 10 — Ninety-two children and three girl teachers were rescued from two mad brothers today who were holding them hostage in their school for 300 million lire ransom.
 Arturo Santalo, 37, recently released from a mental institution, and his brother Osvaldo, 22, were captured after one of the teachers, Miss Paolo del Ceratore, grabbed a knife from Osvaldo. The brothers had come to Terrazzano, a village of less than 1,000 persons eight miles north of Milan, on their motor scooter from nearby Rho. An hour before noon the scooter scorted to a stop in front of the metal fence surrounding the two-story schoolhouse in the village square. The brothers hopped from the machine.
 Arturo—newly released from the Aversa madhouse on parole and due back there in a week for a checkup—pushed into the building in front of Osvaldo, whom police described as a near-moron dominated by his insane brother. The two pulled guns on the teachers and barred the doors on the inside.

At once the madmen began to pump pistol shots out the window. Slashed by bullets.
 A villager, Mrs. Irene Lingeri, mother of 8-year-old pupil Gianni, rushed screaming to the schoolhouse door. A bullet crashed into her leg. Two men pulled her to safety while she screamed: "I want my Gianni!"

An alarm to Milan and nearby towns brought 40 truckloads of national police. But even before the police arrived, villagers tried to drive the brothers from the school with hunting rifles. A hail of bullets made them retreat.
 Police Arrive

In a short time a full battalion of carabinieri, the national police, surrounded the school, while sobbing parents milled behind their lines.

The two madmen used the teachers as shields each time they approached the school windows to shout their demands.

First they asked for 100 mattresses. Then they wanted an infrared lamp, then bullet-proof vests, then a television set.
 "We want TV. We want movies," Arturo shouted. "We want to create an international scandal."

They dropped notes into the courtyard, first asking for 100 million and then for 2 million lire.

A courageous policeman made an effort to reach the back door and was met by a volley of shots. He saved himself by dropping to the ground. From a second story window, a mad voice shouted:

"Bring us food, electric stoves, bread. The children must eat."
 At noon, some food was brought up. One brother, using a teacher as a shield in front of him, moved the food through the entrance.

"Give us 200 million lire or we will not have pity on the children," read a note dropped from the window.

Urged to Leave
 Vittorio Emanuele Modica, Milan's police chief who directed the siege, begged the pair to come out of the building.

"Nothing will happen to you," he shouted.

"The police will kill us," one of the madmen replied.

"No one will hurt you," repeated Modica. "I am in command and I can guarantee that."

"We don't believe it," the madman responded. "We are in no hurry."

One of the berserk brothers held up a flask.

"See this? There's acid in it. The children are in our hands. If you make a step we will kill them all. Give us 300 million lire."

Don Eugenio Somaschini, the parish priest, stepped up and pleaded with the pair. They aimed their guns at him and threatened to fire. The priest withdrew.

Their own sister then pleaded with the Santalos to surrender.

Their father, also present, cried: "I know Arturo should never have been let out of the asylum."
 Shut Lock Off

The brothers continued to demand a television set. In a brief truce, police put a TV set on a window ledge, hoping to distract the madmen. But as they waited, school teacher Del Ceratore leaped at Osvaldo and fought with him. When Arturo went to his brother's aid, the police moved in. They shot the lock off the door with a tommygun and swept into the building.

Arturo was wounded in the attack.

The liberated children streamed through the door into the arms of hysterically weeping parents and a roar of cheers went up from a dense crowd.

Police brought the two madmen from the building — Osvaldo in manacles and Arturo on a stretcher. The enraged crowd tried to lynch the brothers, but police fought them off.
