Tea for 300 Duke of Newcastle's Dinner Reproduced

The figure of the Englishwoman of 1706 must certainly have been awesome to see, for the generation was no believer in the virtues of fresh vegetables, crisp salads or light desserts.

Broiled, grilled, roasted, usually highly spiced, meats or game incorporated into soups, stews or pies were more in the line of preferences. Desserts were large puddings, rich custards and occasionally a candied fruit.

A "typical" dinner of this period was among those served up at the Newspaper Food Editors Conference in New York the latter part of September. It was a dinner to end all dinners—when costumed lackeys, prized tapestries, rich food and ancient music took us back to the year of Sir Thomas Lipton Company's beginnings, 1806.

Authentic Menu

Lipton's re-creation of a dinner of the Duke of Newcastle, and followed many months of research. Each of the nine courses was brought in on the shoulders of four satin-costumed lackeys, and piped around the room by a pair of Scotch bagpipers. Some of the food was imported, one concession, however, was made to contemporary cooking, the firm's own instant soup mix was used in some of the dishes.

The menu looked like this:

Bisque of Colchester Oysters from Colne Estuary
Ripe Olives French Dried Fruits
Ross Salmon from the River Wyke
Temple Bar Beef and Kidney Pie
Saddle of South Downs Mutton from Sussex
Parslief Potatoes from Fields of Kent
Chelsea Garden Green Peas
Champaigne Rose Sherbet
Cambridge Pans Pheasant with Garniture
The Cheeses of England
Orange Apple Pudding
Tea

Each course was accompanied by the proper wine, poured into one of the seven glasses on the tables. These slowly disappeared as each course was removed and finally a lone glass of water was left to quench any thirst which might by some strange chance, have remained.

One of the unexpected events that will happen in the best planned affairs, occurred when I ordered tea during the meal, and were served not Lipton's, but the Waldorf-Astoria's own blend, proudly publicized on the tea bag's tab.

There is certainly many a slip twixt the pocketbook and the cup for the meal was said to have cost Lipton's in excess of $50,000.

Probe Fails to Link Perjury To Lane D.A.

Attorney General Robert V. Thornton informed Gov. Elmo Smith Friday that a limited investigation of charges of perjury against Lane County District Attorney Eugene C. Venn show no evidence of wrong doing.

The scope of the investigation, Thornton said, was restricted to the charges of subornation of perjury (procuring a person for perjury) following a report containing allegations charging Venn with questionable conduct.

"It is my opinion," Thornton said, "that based upon the report of the investigator from my office and also the state police reports, there is no evidence to justify any conclusions of wrong doing on the part of District Attorney Venn with regard to the alleged crime of subornation of perjury."

"I do not believe any further investigation of these charges is justified."
