If you would live against a background of graceful, consciously casual pattern, choose French Provincial. Well done, it has the deceptive simplicity of onion soup—satisfyingly earthy yet with a well-nigh celestial blending of spice, flavor and texture. There is a delightful contradiction about this style, for though its simple, beautiful lines show a sophisticated gracefulness—yet it carries an air of playing with rusticity. This makes it very adaptable in its use against different backgrounds. The graceful curving legs and old-world satiny finishes are nice against the restful qualities of plain wall spaces and a clean, fresh-air view from simply curtained windows. Used against a formal background of paneled walls and windows intricately draped in silks, the French Provincial is very much in keeping for the graceful lines suggest elegance. There is really no limit to the possibilities of decorating with this style. Its heritage of having been born in a country where each province has its own expression in design and choice of woods such as cherry, apple, pear, chestnut and walnut makes it adaptable to blending with almost any other style. A few well selected pieces lend character to a room furnished with modern furniture and present day shaggy or sleek textured fabrics. Or consider blending English and French Provincial with a few pieces of the best of our contemporary furnishings. The proper use of old-world fabrics can bring these different styles together in a beautiful harmony. Patterns run all the way from delicate flowered brocades and tapestries to bright and forthright cotton checks and plaids. If you choose French Provincial you will have selected a style worthy of your highest artistic effort and guaranteed to prove pleasant and liveable through many years.

Among the new arrivals: The beautiful sculptured-back pink sofa with a sheen of silver threads. The small antiqued gold and gold wall plaques with gaudy overlays of butterflies, and coat of arms designs. The cranberry lamps—copies of Early American oil lamps.

WATCH EACH SUNDAY FOR A DISTINCTIVE

design for LIVING

Good space management can accomplish wonders in a room. The way you manage space, in any room, determines to a large degree the room's efficiency, its comfort, and last but not least, its attractiveness. In the final analysis, good space management means nothing more than arranging and grouping the furniture to utilize conveniently every inch of space, to bring out the room's good points, minimize bad structural features, and create a pleasing setting that best suits the comfort and activities of those who will occupy the room.

Whatever you do, if your living room is on the large side, don't string the furniture all around the walls and leave the middle of the room looking like a vacant arena. Divide and conquer the space.

It's true! Furniture arrangements can perform magic transformations in most room plans. If you'd like some help with planning your arrangements, do come in and call on our trained decorators for suggestions and advice.

Every piece of furniture we offer you—large or small—has been designed to be as practical as it is beautiful. We've given special attention to style, line, form and weight. Price is an important point, too... because we insist on always giving you excellent value! Do come in.

Of necessity, we are inclined to give more careful attention to space maneuvering in a small room, but large rooms require thoughtful planning, too.
