City Library Burglar Held In Washington
 A man being held at Bremerton, Wash., has admitted the burglary of the Salem public library last Oct. 1. City police reported Saturday. Officers said information from Bremerton also said the man had admitted 14 other library entries in a number of states.

The man in custody was listed by Bremerton officers as Walter Warren Hathaway and Salem police said information to them indicated the man escaped from a Dalton, Ga., jail about a year ago. In the escape a jailer was stabbed and seriously wounded.

The burglary at the library here resulted in theft of about $50 in cash, a number of colored slides and some insurance policies, according to officers. In opening a vault in the library office, the thief set off a tear gas bomb — which probably cost him some tears.

City police said there is small chance Hathaway will be returned here considering the numerous other charges he faces.

State Guidance Association Holds Conference in Salem
 Strains, stresses and frustrations today are frequently caused by trying to adjust between stated beliefs in society and actual practice, Dr. John Rademaker, Willamette University professor, said Saturday at a meeting of the Oregon Personnel and Guidance Association held in Salem at the Hotel Senator.

He offered as an example the necessity of staying within one's means and having to combat the "stimulation of more wants, such as are created by advertising."

Conference Of Christian Schools Ends

Approximately 120 persons Saturday concluded a three-day conference of Northwest Fellowship of Christian Schools at Salem Academy.

Represented at the conference were 22 Christian schools from Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. Those attending included 80 teachers.

"Building Strong Public Relations" was topic of a talk given Saturday by James Bishop, public relations director of George Fox College at Newberg. The final day's agenda also included discussion sessions. Feature of Friday was a rally held at First Evangelical United Brethren Church, with President Edith Habegger of Portland's Cascade College speaking on "Here Is Our Strength for the Future."

The Friday program also was marked by numerous other talks on how to build and strengthen Christian schools of the Northwest.

A featured speaker on Thursday was Robert Bennett, professor of Christian education at Western Evangelical Seminary, Portland. His subject was "The Christian Teacher, A Mighty Strength."

Yule Tree Growers Meet Here for Northwest Association Convention

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
 Farm Editor, The Statesman

Getting a Christmas tree is no longer a matter of going out along a roadside and cutting a fir tree that suits one's fancy. It is now a matter of chemistry, genetics, botany, law and mathematics.

These points were brought out Saturday at the first Salem meeting of the Northwest Christmas Tree Association. The all-day event was held at the Y.M.C.A. which had 100 people in attendance.

Law has played a big part in recent years in stopping the practice of promiscuous cutting of trees along roadsides and in farmer pastures. It was pointed out that stiff fines are being collected for this practice which is now listed as "theft," association members said Saturday.

Parent Trees
 Russell Slade, forester from Columbia County, spoke briefly on the study in genetics of fir trees. Efforts are being made, he, and other foresters present said, to find parent trees which would produce the "right type" of Christmas trees. It was the foresters' opinion that eventually a program would be set up which would aim toward breeding perfect Christmas trees.

"After all," Clark Betts, Foster, association president, said, "this is a $6,000,000 business in Oregon and Washington, and is very likely to increase to a much larger business."

125,000 Acre Farm
 William Penny of the South Santiam Tree Farm in the Sweet Home area, told of reforestation activities on that 125,000 acre "farm." This year, 700,000 trees would be planted in the reforestation project, he said. Planting will start shortly and will continue into late winter. Two-year old plants will be set out by hand. Some 10 to 15 men will be employed in the project and these are expected to plant approximately 600 trees a day.

He also told of the tree caudexes through birds, fieldmice, deer and bear.

Christmas tree grades were discussed by Martin Syverson, of the National Forest Service, Portland. Syverson agreed with President Betts who had stated earlier that a grading system was needed, not so much for the public as for the tree.

Urges Grading
 "Growers, wholesalers and retailers in Christmas trees should have a Christmas tree terminology so that the industry can talk intelligently about the various types of trees," Syverson said, as he urged a grade system be set up "for use among the wholesalers, growers and retailers. This should include attention to density of foliage, color, uniformity of the tree."

Forester urged those who wished to set out a tree plantation, to prepare the soil well. A five per cent survival of planted trees was reported in some areas where "soil had been prepared poorly and the trees did not have proper shade."
