right discrimination, plague the American railroads today, railroad attorney Frank C. McColloch told a Salem audience of chamber of commerce members and railroad executives Monday.

Outmoded law puts the railroads at a competitive disadvantage, it was maintained by the Portland counsel for Southern Pacific in a Marion Hotel luncheon program arranged for the chamber by Oregon Railroads Association.

"No other transportation agency is so smothered with regulations as the railroads," declared McColloch. And, meanwhile, 75 per cent of commercial traffic on the highways is exempt from regulation, be averred.

Date Back 70 Years Federal and state regulations over the railroads date back 70 years to a time when the railroads had a virtual monopoly on inter-city passenger and freight movement, according to the speaker who said patience by the public and understanding of the economic changes since then are necessary in appraising the attitude of rail road management today.
