The proposed street name grid for the Salem area taken under consideration Wednesday evening by the Marion County Planning Commission would need approval of the Salem City Council and the Marion County Court if the

Hearing Airs High Dam Plan

PAUL W. HARVEY JR., Associated Press Writer
Representatives of farm, labor and public power groups pleaded here Wednesday night for a federal high dam in Hells Canyon as a means of providing more power to create much-needed employment in Oregon.
But Idaho Power Co., which has a Federal Power Commission license to build three low dams in the canyon on the Snake River, countered that these projects would produce almost as much power as a high dam, and do it much more quickly.
The hearing was before the Senate State and Federal Affairs Committee, which is considering a house-passed memorial asking Congress to appropriate funds to build the high dam. It would flood out the sites of the three low dams, one of which is under construction.

Elmer McClure, master of the Oregon State Grange, declared that the difference in power output between the high dam and the low dams would mean 70,000 additional jobs.

However, Robert F. Ball, Boise, argued that the high dam would produce 785,000 kilowatts of dependable power, compared with 267,000 by the lower dams.

Cost Cited
He said the high dam would cost 399 million dollars, and the low dams 133 millions.
"So," Ball said, "for only an extra 18,000 kilowatts you would spend an extra quarter of a billion dollars of public funds. In our three low dams, the public isn't asked to contribute any money, and the company would pay 19 million dollars a year in taxes, including one million to the state of Oregon."

James T. Marr, secretary of the National Hells Canyon Assn. and executive secretary of the AFL-CIO State Labor Council, said the company is acting illegally in building the low dams without a state license. It applied for a license from the State Hydroelectric Commission, which hasn't acted.

Marr said that his association appealed last week to the U. S. Supreme Court from a federal circuit court order which upheld the granting of the FPC license for the low dams.

He said it's time that the states of Washington and Oregon fi-commission does recommend the proposal to these bodies.

The proposal, as presented by planning technician David Baker, would generally organize Salem street names so that named streets would run east and west and numbered avenues would run north and south.

The street naming plan would be related to efforts already underway to simplify addresses in the Salem area, which include geographic prefixes and a new house numbering grid approved by the city.

The grid system is designed so that outlying areas can be included in the naming program if they so desire, Baker pointed out. Areas which the program could cover include South Salem, Four Corners, Keizer District, Aumsville, Brooks and Turner.

Request Man
Commission members requested Baker to prepare a grid system to include street names in the West Salem area. Members failed to reach agreement on whether Salem street names should be continued across the river into West Salem if it were included under the program.

Baker estimated that some 30 or 40 street names would be changed in the area lying two or three miles outside of the city limits.

The grid plan provides for 26-block alphabetical listing of street names in these areas. The first block north of Keizer would be named alphabetically for rivers of the world, then a block named after mountains, and the final listing after noted Americans.

Names Suggested
The area south of Boone Road would be named for cities in the first 26-block area, colleges in the second, and women's first names in the final block.

Verne McMullen requested that the commission attempt to compile an alphabetical listing of names of Marion County pioneers to substitute for one of these blocks.

Under the proposed plan, the boundary streets for geographic prefixes would retain their names but the designation would be changed to boulevard. These include Liberty Road, N. River Road, and part of Commercial Street. The boulevard designation also would apply to major arternanced the high court appeal, instead of making the Hells Canyon Assn. do it.

Other Speakers
Harley Libby, president of the Oregon Farmers Union, favored the high dam because "it would develop the full potential of the river. The Idaho Power project imperils the development of the full resources."

Others who spoke for the high dam were Lee Wooden, president of the Oregon Rural Electric Cooperative Assn., Byron C. Brinton, Baker, secretary of the Hells Canyon Development Assn., Clint Haight and Oscar George, both of Baker, and Ted Avery, plans on the county development plan.

Circular or winding thoroughfares would use the designation of Terrace, Drive or Way.
In presenting the proposal, Baker pointed out that the street name grid would prove advantageous and convenient to tourists, would decrease cost of delivery and other services to area residents, and cut down on inefficient operation of emergency vehicles such as fire trucks and ambulances.

Quick Vote on Mideast Plan Threatened

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20 (AP)—Majority Leader Johnson (D-Tex.) threatened late today to force a quick Senate vote on the Middle East resolution unless senators start showing up on the floor to debate it.

The Senate was virtually deserted at times today.
"We are not going to dilly-dally on a matter of this importance," Johnson declared.

He said he didn't want to be lecturing his colleagues but that he was prepared to vote on the big policy issue at any time and if senators continued to absent themselves the resolution will be acted on.

The Senate has set aside about two weeks to debate President Eisenhower's program.
