Dolls of every size, shape, color and country were exhibited Friday at city playgrounds by hundreds of youngsters during the annual Salem Doll Day.

A part of the city's summer recreation schedule, Doll Day was the second of seven "special days."

A doll 150 years old was shown at McKinley playground by Camille Carlson, 2635 S. High St. Many dolls had passed the 50 year mark and there were several over 100 and two others over 145. The oldest is thought to be from China.

The day also produced a 4-foot doll, a 1½-inch doll, a two-headed doll, and a doll with 12 dolls inside it.

Prize for the largest collection of dolls went to Sherrie Stovall, 555 Cross St., who displayed 28 at Bush playground. In the collection were dolls from Holland, Germany, France, Spain, Mexico and many other countries. Several other collections of over 20 dolls were also exhibited.

Over 400, many with an exotic history, were shown. Some were made of satin, others of wood, glass, plastic or plaster. There were puppets, clowns, kangaroos, bears, ducks and the famous raggedy Ann dolls. They were dressed in bride gowns, formal dresses, mink stoles and some were encased in glass. Every color of the rainbow, and then some, was represented.

Linn County Registered Sheep Sale Due Aug. 3

By LILLIE L. MADSEN
Farm Editor, The Statesman

ALBANY, July 13—More than 260 head of registered and guaranteed yearling stud rams and ewes will be offered for sale at the annual Willamette Valley ram sale, O. E. Mikesell, Albany, secretary of the sale, said here today. He added that catalogues are now available for the auction to be held Aug. 3 at the Linn County Fairgrounds.

Breeds to be offered in the sale are Romney, Lincoln, Corridale, Columbia, Cheviot, Shropshire, Hampshire, Southdown and Suffolk.

Quite a demand for rams and the few registered ewes expected is anticipated by Mikesell at the sale. While the price of lambs slipped to $20.50 a hundred on some of the best lots that came in a week ago, it climbed again to $21 and better later this week. And with this, total sheep receipts for the four-day trading period ending Thursday were estimated at 7165, the highest since 1939.

Seasonal Drop Cited

Price of lamb usually drops in early July and does not climb much again during the summer.

Mikesell said today that more than 5,000 feeder lambs will be offered at two auction sales scheduled for late July. These sales, he said, would not interfere at all with the one to be held here, as the Albany sale is made up entirely of registered animals.

The first of the two July sales will be the one sponsored by the Coos County Livestock Association scheduled for the Howard Leatherman farm, 10 miles northeast of Coquille. The time has been set for Monday, July 22, starting at 1:30 p.m.

The second sale will be by the Benton County Livestock Association, July 29, at the Braha Auction Yard at Corvallis, with starting time set for 1 p.m.

Many Buyers Expected

A large number of Valley buyers are expected to attend both sales. Pastures have been excellent during early summer, and are expected to continue in this condition until grains and grass seeds are harvested, giving additional ranges for feeders.

All feeders offered at both sales, according to Mikesell, are sexed, graded and weighed to insure uniform quality of lots.

Further information on the Coos County sale, can be had from Roger Welty, county extension agent, Coquille. S. A. Jackson, county extension agent, Corvallis, can supply information on the Benton County sale.

Those who wish catalogues or further information on the big Willamette Valley sale at Albany should write to O. E. Mikesell, Linn County Courthouse, Albany.

Mock Attack Expands Civil Defense Activity in Salem

(Story also on page one)

State Civil Defense headquarters in Salem which usually employs 22, more than quadrupled in size Friday as Operation Alert 1957 began. More than 100 workers on three shifts worked through the day and will continue into this weekend.

Two H-bombs, the first a two megaton weapon the second of one megaton proportion, where hypothetically exploded over Portland. The first bomb, alighting at approximately 10:22 leveled the heart of the city, and the second one, supposedly dropped about noon, destroyed the Portland international airport.

Immediately Civil Defense operations throughout the state went into action.

Some simulated evacuation had begun, due to early warning devices, but more than 81,000 persons were still "clustered" in the center of the target area.

A bomb, theoretically dropped on Grand Coulee Dam destroyed the structure releasing thousands of tons of water which flooded down the Columbia River knocking out Bonneville, McNary and The Dalles dams. Thirty-six hours after, water 30 feet deep would have been standing in the heart of Portland had the tragedy actually occurred.

Help From Wind

Civil Defense reported wind direction at the time of the simulated attack was all to Oregon's benefit.

A southeast wind carried the make believe radioactive fallout into Washington except for a small section of Northern Oregon.

Had bombs been dropped all traffic would have led one way out of Portland, state CD worker Don Dill reported. All trucks and traffic heading into Portland would have been stopped and vehicles carrying perishable foods would have been interrupted and the food stored for emergency use.

Beds Available

A survey conducted by Irwin Weddle, superintendent of Salem Memorial Hospital, showed that 600 beds in Salem hospitals could have been made available for serious victims three hours after the bomb dropped. Theory would have moved all non-critical hospital patients outside thus making room.

Gov. Robert Holmes, speaking over a special CD shortwave network, urged civil defense workers to exert special effort because "next time it might be the real thing."

The pioneer statue on top of the Capitol building and the Capital dome both interfered with the state radio communication center located at the Capitol. The interference caused some delay in the transfer of news around the state and could have caused complications during an authentic bombardment.

City and county workers relied heavily on telephone communications.

Sheriff's deputies were notified early Friday morning and with state police set up road blocks throughout the county. They halted traffic and passed out CD leaflets explaining Operation Alert and what to do in case of a real attack.

Free Meals To Mark Polk County Alert

Statesman News Service

DALLAS, July 12—Several hundred Polk County area residents will get free meals today as part of the county's participation in state-wide Civil Defense exercises.

According to Melvin Gilson, newly-appointed Polk civil defense director, the public is to gather at Rickreall park this morning when they hear a 9:45 oclock siren. Anyone who arrives at the park up to 10:30 a.m. will be registered and convoyed to Dallas city park and a free feed.

The mass feeding of an expected 200 will be handled by Ed Hayes and a civil defense class training in mass feeding. The food, all locally produced, will include barbecued beef and bread made from flour ground at Dallas Co-op warehouse and baked by Dallas Bakery.

Saturday night, on signal, the Dallas fire department will move all equipment to pre-arranged dispersal points for inspection by Civil Defense officals.

Gilson, former Dallas school band director, was appointed county CD chief by the county court this morning.

2 State School Meets Combined

Two school conferences scheduled for July have been combined, Rex Putnam, superintendent of public institution, announced Friday.
