Prison Inmate-Made Articles Sold At New Curio Shop on State Street

By PAUL W. HARVEY III
Staff Writer, The Statesman

"Warden's Worries" are being sold at the State Penitentiary—with the blessings of Warden Clarence Gladden.

However, they are not problems for Gladden but instead are among the $10,000 stock of inmate-made articles being sold at the newly opened curio shop on State Street next to the prison.

"Warden's Worries" is name give to a new line of fishing flies.

The shop, itself inmate-built, has been a goal of Gladden's for several years but it had to wait until other parts of the program could be completed.

Once a loosely controlled program at the prison, the hobby program was revamped by Gladden until today it is run with an "iron-hand" and is "very much appreciated" by the inmates.

Runs Program

The man chosen to run the program, M. D. Boring, said 46 men are now allowed hobby work privileges in the workroom inside the walls.

He said up until several years ago the work was done in the cells but "this could never be successful unless there was control over it."

Several thousand articles are available to the public at the shop, ranging from key-cases to expensive handbags and paintings. Fishing flies alone number about 36,000.

Prices are very reasonable, Boring said. They range from $2 to $7.50 on wallets and from $5 to $30 on handbags, many of them with elaborate hand-tolled designs.

All the articles made must be sold through the curio shop, Boring added, with the entire sale price going into the inmate's fund which he receives upon being released from the prison.

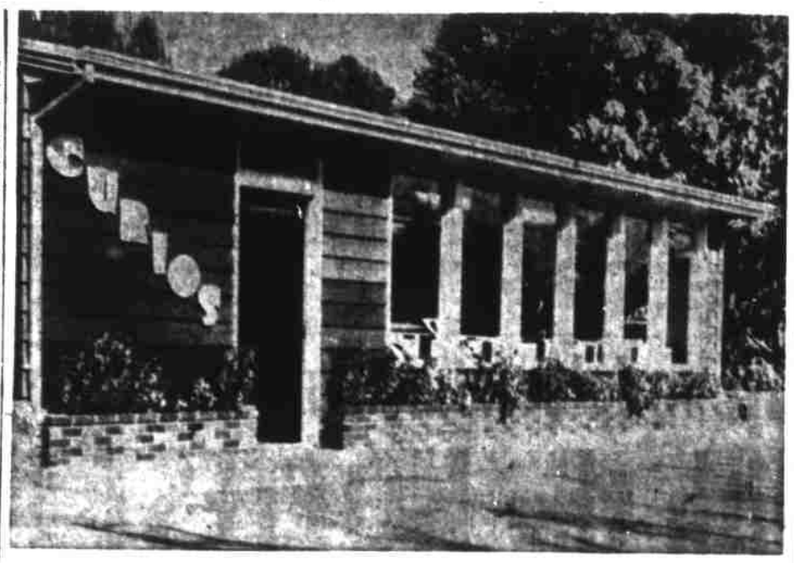
Cooperation High

He noted that cooperation between prison officials and the men working on handicraft is very high, and added that a "high-class of man" wants to do this kind of work. Work is done during leisure time.

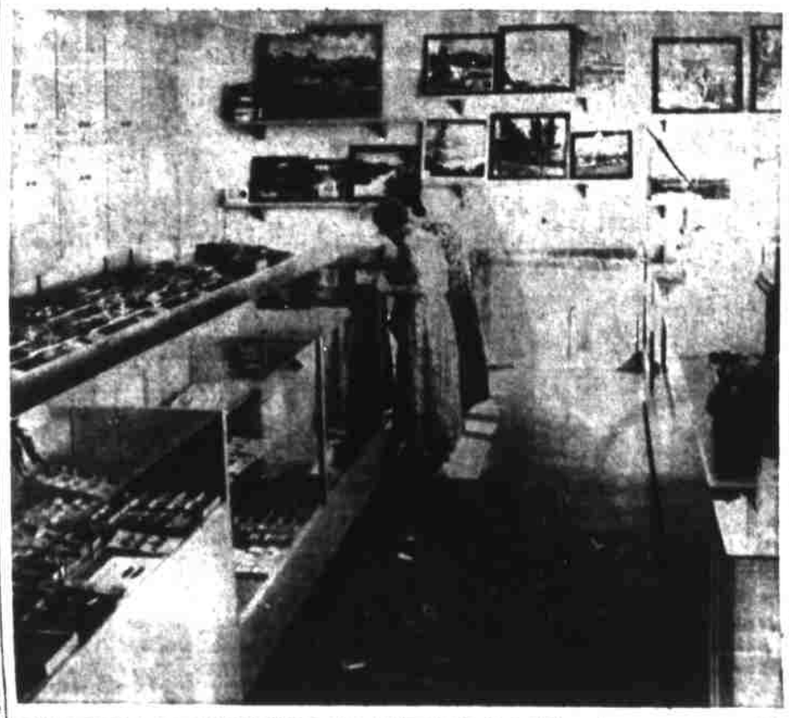
Boring said the reasons for the program are to take care of spare time, to teach the men a handicraft and to provide funds. Inmates must apply for the hobby room first and then go through the classification board, Boring stated. The man must buy all his tools and materials.

Already business at the shop on State has shown improvement. The store was formerly in a house near the administration building and before that in the building.

Hours are 9-11:30 a.m., and 12:30 p.m. to 5:45 p.m., seven days a week.



More than $10,000 worth of inmate-made handicraft is on sale to the public at this new curio shop on State Street next to the Penitentiary. The shop, built by inmate labor, opened earlier this week.



Articles ranging from 36,000 fishing flies to hundreds of wallets and purses are on sale in the prison's curio shop. The articles provide funds for the men when they are released. (Statesman Photos)

Non-Strikers Observe Beer Picket Line

Four non-striking employes refused to cross picket line at a Salem wholesale house Thursday as the strike against beer distributors in Salem, Corvallis and Albany continued in its third week.

E. C. Bratton, manager of McDonald Candy Co., one of six Salem beer distributors being struck, said the four were employed in the tobacco and candy departments and did not have any connection with the beer distribution.

Ward Graham, business agent for Teamsters Local 324, said the four refused to cross picket lines "in sympathy with the striking beer drivers."

No progress in solving the strike has been reported in the past few days, reported Graham and W. F. Whitely, secretary-counsel for the Oregon Beer Distributors.

Whitely said a meeting is slated in Albany Friday afternoon for distributors from Albany, Corvallis, Eugene and Salem attending.

Few taverns in the Salem area have reported a shortage of beer.

New Solons in Special Session To Get Full Pay

New legislators named to fill four vacancies in the Oregon House of Representatives will receive full two-year, $1,200 salaries for serving in the special session, Harold Phillippe, accounting manager in the secretary of state's office, said Thursday.

Phillippe said the law is clear that any legislator who serves during parts of both years of a biennium shall receive the full $600 salary for each year.

Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton has already ruled that the three legislators who resigned and the estate of Sen. Herman Chindgren owe the state $600 since they served only a year.

One of the representatives who resigned, Director of Agriculture Robert J. Steward, had not collected his next year's salary, however.

Oregon Tech Revamping Completed

The State Board of Education Thursday announced it has completed the reorganization of Oregon Technical Institute as directed by the 1957 Legislature.

OTI, located near Klamath Falls, now is directly responsible to the board. It used to be a part of the vocational education division, which in turn is under the board.

The new status makes the operation and administration of OTI similar to that of the state university and colleges.

The Board of Education adopted an outline of the purpose of OTI, and a voluminous administrative code for all phases of operation, including salary schedules, fees, board and room rates.
