State President Of AAUW Speaks To Salem Branch

Defining the program of the American Association of University Women as "the overall educational course of its activities," Miss Maurine Lober, state president of AAUW, told Salem branch members at a recent meeting that the Association needs to be concerned with the number of women entering college, but not graduating.

Miss Lober, pointing to the large number of women attempting to complete their education in later years against difficulties, challenged the organization to encourage young women not only to enter college but to graduate.

Miss Robert Y. Thornton, local branch member and former state president, reported on national convention actions, including the abolition of associate membership by which women who have not completed college have been able to belong to the Association. She pointed out, however, that women who are now associate members may continue this relationship to a local branch which has provision for this status, so long as they do not let their membership lapse.

Mrs. Lawrence Merriam presided at the business meeting at which it was announced that a contribution has been made to the fellowship fund in memory of Mrs. Ellen Fisher, a recently deceased member.
