Board Votes to Open Two More Rooms at Judson High

(Story also on page 1)

With construction of two new Salem District high schools about 70 per cent complete, the school board decided Thursday to open up two more rooms than they had figured they would need.

The board voted authority to school officials to contract for finishing of two of the six rooms at Judson Junior High School, south of Salem, that were to be left unfinished.

The rooms will be finished by the present contractors subject to agreement on specifications and cost, which has been estimated at $2,265 each, including walls and plaster, cabinets and shelving, and bulletin and chalkboards.

The other rooms and a section in Waldo Junior High School, under construction northeast of the city, will be left unfinished for physical education classes until they are needed for classrooms.

Other plans for the opening of the two schools next fall also are proceeding apace, according to reports made at the school board meeting Thursday afternoon in the Administration Building.

Subway Train Stalls During Rush Hour

NEW YORK, Dec. 12 (AP) — A twelve-car subway train loaded with Manhattan-bound commuters stalled for two and a half hours in Brooklyn today during the morning rush hour. One man suffered a heart attack and more than a dozen women fainted aboard the train.

Police reported that the stalling was an accident and not strike sabotage.

An estimated 5,000 other passengers aboard two following trains were caught underground for periods of up to 30 minutes.

As time went by without rescue some women on the first train became hysterical and their screams spread fright from car to car.

When a bridge was finally made from the three trains, passengers were evacuated to the nearest station, male passengers helping some of the women who had fainted in the thin underground air.

Doctors from nearby hospitals treated those who had fainted. The man who suffered the heart attack left the scene before the doctors arrived, police reported.

Other complications considered in making assignments are an effort to keep a balance between men and women teachers in each school, and assigning coaches where they can also teach classroom subjects, he added.
